FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE—

MCAS, Cherry Point

BY MAJ. GEN. VERNON E. MEGEE, USMC
Commanding General

MCAS, Cherry Point, N. C., already the world's largest Marine Corps air station, is still growing.

The Corps' East Coast air training center is not being increased geographically, but is growing internally, as its runways are extended, its facilities for aircraft are increased and new homes for personnel are added.

Built at break-neck speed at the start of World War II to train pilots for the quickly expanded Marine air arm, Cherry Point now is undergoing a vast modernization and face-lifting which will make it ready for a new job in a new hour of crisis.

Contracts totaling approximately $20,000,000 have been awarded for the improvement of the field and its facilities and for the erection of additional homes. The construction, already under way, will result in longer runways, more warehouses, more aircraft parking areas and more office space, as well as 1421 more homes for military and civilian personnel working at the base.

When the construction is completed, Cherry Point will be able to handle any jet fighters now being flown and any in the drawing board stage.

The additional improvements will make Cherry Point probably the most expensive piece of swampland in the United States, valued, with improvements and equipment, at about $130,000,000—or about 800 times the estimated worth of the 17 square miles over which the air station sprawls.

The improvements cover a wide range, including all the facilities necessary for an up-to-date airport, as well as all of those necessary for a modern city of from 15,000 to 20,000 residents.

Among them are the 1155 buildings on the station, and the 218 just outside the gate in the community of Havelock. These structures include 1639 dwelling units, about half of which are furnished.

The improvements include also more than 60 miles of roadways; more than $5,000,000 in existing 400-foot-wide runways, ranging from 4800 to 6200 feet long; more than 21 miles of sidewalks; approximately 51 miles of underground and overground telephone lines; 9½ miles of railroad tracks; 371 fire alarm boxes

Maj. Gen. Megee

An Open Letter to Congress

As you assemble next Tuesday, 8 January, for the convening of the second session of the 82d Congress, we hope that you will keep in mind your obligation to the 3,500,000 men and women in the Armed Forces of the United States.

In the last session, you voted pay increases, retroactive to 1 July 1951, for classified civil service workers and for the Postal employees of the government plus bonus pay for overtime. Business and industry have been constantly increasing the pay of workers and executives to keep pace with the mounting prices. But nothing has been done to readjust Service pay in line with the increases in the cost of living.

On the other hand, while Service incomes have been at a standstill, expenses have been going up. You canceled the military income tax exemption and upped the rates, giving the Service a double jolt in taxation. You restricted the operation of the Post Exchanges and tacked a five percent surcharge on the food Service families purchase in the commissaries. Your own investigations have revealed the high rents they must pay for inadequate and substandard family housing. In addition, thousands fighting in Korea and many serving in Europe and the Far East, must maintain their families separately. The travel allowances for officers have been reduced from eight to six cents per mile. And now the Army is proposing to add more expenses by threatening to change the uniform.

The House Armed Services Committee has reported the Department of Defense bill to increase service pay by ten percent, but has dropped the provision making it retroactive to 1 July 1951. The proposed modest increase will scarcely cover the additional costs imposed upon men and women in uniform. The retroactive feature, which you gave to the civilian employees, would enable Service folk to recoup some portion of the losses suffered during the past year. We earnestly urge that you restore the retroactive clause and enact the measure as promptly as legislative procedures permit.

3d Cycle AF Promotions

Air Force officials this week were reported working on details concerning a third-cycle temporary promotion program for officers.

There is a likelihood that criteria will be made known this month. Probably, no definite decisions will be made until the fiscal year 1953 budget is submitted to Congress, for it is certain the budget will have an effect on future promotion policies.

The Air Force in the fiscal year 1952 budget was shooting for a strength of 95 wings. Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett and others have reported that the Air Force now is planning in terms of 143 wings, but how rapidly this target will be achieved is dependent upon the upcoming budget.

Also involved in future promotion planning is the factor of how many Reserve officers remain on active duty after completing their tours.

Meantime, additional promotions in the second-cycle advancements are published herewith. Some names are repeated from earlier issues of THE JOURNAL because of the fact that these names were received

Navy to Select Reserve Captains and Commanders

Navy selection boards will be convened on or about 12 Feb. to recommend line and staff corps officers of the Naval Reserve for promotion to the grades of captain and commander.

Officers who reported for active service, other than training, after 30 June 1951, as well as officers on inactive duty, will be considered by the boards. The Navy said the former group was not considered by boards which met last fall to consider active duty officers "because of the previously established 30 June cut-off date."

Those who are eligible for selection by the boards are inactive officers who have met the established eligibility requirements of the Reserve program, and in addition, those who reported for active military service with the Regular Navy for more than 30 days after 30 June 1951, but before 1 Jan. 1952, and those who reported for active duty in the Naval Reserve Program prior to 1 Jan. 1952.

The first Regular 1952 boards will be convened on 22 Jan. to select lieutenants

Secy. Pace Gives Impetus to Pay Bill

Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, Jr., this week kicked-off the Pentagon 1952 legislative campaign to gain rapid enactment of the 10 per cent cost-of-living pay increase and the year-old Combat Pay Bill.

The first Service secretary to make a public address in the new year, Mr. Pace took the occasion to stress that the average weekly wage in all manufacturing industries has gone up 17 per cent since October 1949, when the Career Compensation Act was passed.

In a statement certain to have great influence on Capitol Hill, Secretary Pace told a New Orleans, La., audience:

"I would be disloyal to those who serve you and remiss in my duties as Secretary of the Army if I did not speak out emphatically for a measure to bring some relief to our soldiers whose pay has not kept pace with either civilian pay increases or the rising cost of living."

Not since last October when Pentagon officials testified before a House Armed Services Subcommittee has a Department of Defense official spoken out so forcefully and effectively in support of the pay boost.

The full text of Mr. Pace's remarks on the pay raise legislation is published herewith and on page 550 is found the full excerpt from his speech on the subject of Combat Pay.

Meantime, the House Rules Committee has for official consideration the request of Chairman Carl Vinson (D-Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee that the 10 per cent pay raise bill be given speedy clearance for vote by the entire House.

Following is the text of a letter written by Chairman Vinson to Chairman Adolph Sabath (D-Ill.) of the powerful Rules Committee.

"The bill, H. R. 5715, 'To amend sections 201(a), 301(e), 302(f), 302(g), 508, 527, and 528, Public Law 351, 81st Congress, as amended,' (providing for an increase in pay and allowances for members of the uniformed forces), was approved by the House Committee on Armed Services on 16 October 1951 and reported to the House on the same date.

"I would appreciate it very much if the Rules Committee would grant a hearing on this bill preliminary to the granting of a rule.

"It is my present plan to begin hearings on the Universal Military Training Plan on 15 January and I anticipate that the Full Committee will be very heavily committed for some time after that date. Therefore it would be appreciated if you could hear my application for the rule on H. R. 5715 one day during the week of 8 January."

It is conceivable that a vote will be possible on the pay legislation by the middle of the month.

Senate Ready

As reported by the House Armed Services Committee, the pay raise would become effective on the first day of the first

New Year Sees Lull In Korean Fighting

The New Year brought almost a complete lull to the Korean land battle area. Ground fighting which had flared up late last week and early this week, particularly on the western front, died down, and apart from a few minor patrol clashes, and some artillery exchanges there was almost a complete cessation of activity all along the front during the first few days of the New Year.

Early in the week there was a continuation of the brisk action which began late last week on the western front, where opposing forces disputed possession of a hill west of Korangpo-ri. The fighting, in which tanks and artillery units participated, centered around an Allied outpost position, which was attacked and taken by an enemy battalion. The Allies counter-attacked, and for several days an inconclusive action was fought, but on Thursday 3 Jan. a strong Allied attack by a tank infantry team recaptured all ground previously lost.

With this exception the entire front was almost completely quiet. On the central sector Allied patrols reported only a few light contacts with the enemy, while in the east there were several engagements between very small groups, including the repulse of a small enemy probing attack in the Satali Valley, after a 20-minute fight.

Few Air Combats

There were very few air combats during the week. Numerous enemy planes were sighted, but Allied pilots reported that enemy flyers were reluctant to fight, preferring instead to return to their bases in Manchuria. In brief encounters three enemy MIG jets were damaged, while none of our planes was damaged in air-to-air combat.

Allied bombers and fighter-bombers continued their interdiction program, making hundreds of cuts in rail tracks in North Korea, and attacking bridges, rolling stock, and highway traffic. Intense anti-aircraft fire was encountered and five Allied fighter-bombers were lost to ground fire, but one of the pilots was rescued. Medium bombers hit marshalling yards and airfields, and provided close support for ground troops in round-the-clock operations.

Naval vessels maintained a close blockade of both coasts of the Korean peninsula during the week, bombarding Red shore installations, and shelling enemy gun positions, troop assembly areas, and communications facilities. Carrier-based Navy and Marine planes covered rail lines and highways, knocking out tracks and bridges, and disrupting highway traffic.

45th Division in Action

Far East headquarters this week confirmed the report that elements of the 45th Division of the Oklahoma National Guard had been in action in Korea for several weeks. Previously this division had been in training in Japan. First units of the division went into the battle line early in December. The division is commanded by Maj. Gen. James C. Stryon, of Hobart, Oklahoma, and the assistant commander is Brig. Gen. Robert R. Dulaney, of Leesburg, Va.

The most important ground action of the week began late last week on 28 Dec. on the western front, and continued over the weekend. United Nations forces yielded an advance position west of Korangpo-ri in an attack made by an enemy battalion, supported by artillery and automatic weapons fire, and by fire from 10 tanks or self-propelled guns.

Allied elements launched a tank-supported counter-action to regain the lost ground. Soon afterward enemy reinforcements arrived and the fighting became heavy, with the Reds employing an intense volume of small arms, automatic weapons, mortar and artillery fire. Both sides fought in close combat, using hand grenades, as well as other weapons.

After a hard fight Allied troops regained the hill position, but later counter-attacks by the enemy forced another withdrawal. In a subsequent action on 3 Jan. the ground lost by the Allies was retaken and held.

Light Probe Repulsed

Elsewhere there was very little activity. A light probe by an enemy group northwest of Yonchon was repulsed after a 40-minute fight. A United Nations raiding patrol southwest of Kumsong, on the central front, surrounded an enemy platoon and occupied a hill position after a 3-hour action. Allied units northwest of the Punch Bowl repulsed a light probing attack.

The 1st Marine Division and a South Korean division on the eastern front reported several light skirmishes with enemy patrols during the week. Allied warships off the east coast provided naval gunfire support for Allied troops in this sector. Included among the actions near the east coast during the period was a light enemy probe in the Satali Valley, which was easily repulsed.

The U. S. Light Cruiser Manchester and the Destroyer Escort Fletcher, operating off the east coast, supported ground troops in the Kosong area with long-range gunfire. Enemy troops, guns and supply points along the battle line were taken under fire in night and day bombardment. For the most part, on account of weather conditions, results were unobserved. In the same area the U. S. Destroyer Collett fired 5-inch shells at enemy entrenchments.

Enemy rail lines along the coastal flats north of Wonsan were hit repeatedly by accurate shellfire from the U. S. Heavy Cruiser Rochester. The cruiser also moved close inshore in the Chano area in order to utilize its helicopter to spot targets for carrier-based Navy planes, which were cutting rail lines in that vicinity.

Repair Roadbeds

Labor gangs repairing roadbeds and bridges at and near Wonsan were dispersed by gunfire from U. S. Destroyers Mansfield and MacKenzie. Marshalling yards, storage areas, buildings, roads and bridges were also taken under fire by these destroyers. A train shed in Wonsan fell after being hit seven times by naval gunfire.

The U. S. Destroyer-Minesweeper Doyle shelled rail and road targets along the shore line northward from Hunsnam, but snow and ground haze hampered observation of results. The USS Swenson, Endicott and Bayonne fired night naval artillery missions against shore targets of opportunity as they patrolled the northeastern coast line between Chongjin and Songjin.

Naval planes from the U. S. Heavy Carriers Essex and Valley Forge struck hard at enemy communications lines in North-eastern Korea with devastating results this week. Skyraiders and Corsairs swept the Pukchon, Kowan and Wonsan areas, cutting rail lines in hundreds of places, inflicting heavy casualties on enemy troops, and destroying a Red supply train and locomotive.

Essex planes caught the train consisting of a locomotive and four boxcars of supplies near Kowan. It was trapped by rail cuts on either side, and then destroyed by rockets and bombs. Navy pilots wiped out nearly 200 enemy troops by machinegun fire at Wonsan.

Marine pilots on the west coast destroyed enemy mortar positions southeast of Ponggang. They also cut rail lines between Sariwon and Pyongyang, and attacked Communist artillery positions.

Near Haeju on the west coast, planes from the Australian Carrier Sydney machinegunned troops and supply points.

Senate Group Promises Combat Pay Resumption

The Senate Armed Services Committee early in 1952 will resume hearings on the year-old combat pay legislation, Chairman Richard Russell (D-Ga.) has promised.

The legislation, first advocated by the Army shortly after outbreak of hostilities in Korea but not introduced in Congress until January 1950, would authorize $100 a month for officers and $50 a month for enlisted personnel in actual combat against the enemy.

The bill, retroactive to 27 June 1950, has the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, which speaks for the President.

At the time the bill was sent to Congress, the Department of Defense stated that the President had directed that the problems involved in permanent combat pay legislation (the pending bill is applicable only to Korea) be studied and appropriate recommendations be submitted.

The Pentagon stated that "upon completion of the study within the Department of Defense appropriate legislative recommendations will be submitted to Congress."

As far as can be ascertained, this study has not been made. No recommendations concerning permanent combat pay legislation have been submitted.

The Senate Armed Services Committee opened hearings on the Combat Pay Bill in April 1950 and heard testimony from Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, Jr., and General J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff. Another who appeared at the brief hearings was Maj. Gen. John H. Church, USA, Commanding General of the Infantry Center at Ft. Benning, Ga., and former commander of the 24th Infantry Division in Korea.

The Senate action was suspended abruptly as the Armed Services Committee opened the dramatic hearings on the removal of General of the Army Douglas MacArthur from command in the Far East.

The Combat Pay Bill was not taken up again by the Senate group. The House Armed Services Committee has held no hearing whatsoever on the measure.

As to the prospective fate of the bill, its passage was first placed in jeopardy by the long delay in its introduction, and was handicapped further by the Senate Committee's inability to complete action during 1951.

Defense officials can be expected to make a strong presentation in behalf of the bill, but with the prospect of an end to the fighting in Korea and the certain stress on economy in an election year, an optimistic outlook on the future of this legislation is difficult.

Secy. Pace Urges Passage

Late this week, the Combat Pay Bill, which during recent months has wanted for public advocates, received vital support as Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, Jr., called for its passage.

Mr. Pace, speaking at New Orleans, La., said that "because the ground soldier has borne the heaviest brunt of the Korean fighting . . . we in the Army feel especially strongly about combat pay."

Secretary Pace's remarks demonstrate reassuringly that the Pentagon will make a strong effort in the forthcoming session to gain approval of the hazardous duty pay legislation. The New Orleans speech is certain to improve greatly the chances of the bill's enactment.

Combat Pay Excerpt

Following is the text of the Army Secretary's remarks on Combat Pay:

"The Congress has recognized in past military legislation the time-honored American principle that those who brave extra hazards in their work shall receive extra remuneration. That is why Army paratroopers, Navy submariners, airmen, sailors and marines on flight duty, and others receive extra pay while they are serving on hazardous duty."

"Now we are asking for the logical extension of that principle to include those in the Armed Forces who engage in the most hazardous duty of all—actual battle."

"Because the ground soldier has borne the heaviest brunt of the Korean fighting—and the latest published casualty figures are eloquent testimonial of this fact—we in the Army feel especially strongly about combat pay."

"Let me make quite clear, however, that I do not for a moment consider any amount of pay adequate for the terrible hardships

Permanent Missing Persons Law Held Essential

The necessity of Congressional action to make permanent the temporary World War II Missing Persons Act legislation has been demonstrated in Korea.

Little opposition consequently is foreseen when Congress is asked to take this action during the forthcoming session.

Without the provisions of the Missing Persons Act—it remained on the books fortunately because the war with Germany and Japan technically is not yet over—thousands of dependents of military personnel in Korea would have been subjected to critical financial hardships, a JOURNAL survey revealed this week.

The Act, passed in 1942 and made retroactive to the declaration of the national emergency in September 1939, gives the Service Secretaries authority to make pay allotments to dependents in cases where this is necessary to prevent undue suffering.

Here is how this provision has played a key role in maintaining morale of military personnel and their dependents from the moment hostilities broke out in Korea.

Aided Evacuated Families

When the North Koreans launched their aggression in June 1950, about 1700 dependents of U. S. personnel were evacuated immediately from Korea. In many cases, their sponsors had not provided allotments, since the family was not separated. The welfare of the families of men who remained to fight the enemy was in immediate jeopardy.

But because of the Missing Persons Act, authority existed for making special payments to these dependents. The fact of the matter is that scores of families were provided with urgently needed cash directly upon reaching San Francisco.

Otherwise, many of these dependents would have been left destitute upon their arrival in the United States.

Thus, the Act met the immediate challenge in Korea. How has it functioned subsequently?

Take the case of a mythical Lt. John Doe of the Army, who was taken prisoner early in the fighting. Suppose he had not allotted an adequate amount of his pay for his dependents, but instead had sent money orders home each month. Or suppose the allotment he had originally made, then adequate, became inadequate because of the rise in the cost of living or because of illness in his family.

Prevented Hardships

Here is where the Missing Persons Act has proved to be such an outstanding success in human relations.

If the lieutenant's wife, Mrs. John Doe, is confronted with a situation where her husband, now missing, had either failed to make an allotment or the allotment proved insufficient because of changed conditions, she can obtain aid.

Mrs. Doe need only to go to the nearest military installation and make known the facts of the case.

The Secretary of the Army also, the other Service Secretaries has the authority to allot either a portion (in most cases) or even the entire pay of the military person who is missing to aid his dependents. The Secretary's decision is final.

The part of Lieutenant Doe's pay which is not allotted either as a result of a declaration he made before becoming missing or which was not subsequently allotted at the direction of the Secretary to prevent suffering accrues to his account.

If Lieutenant Doe should be found alive—for example, if he were returned to U. S. control from status as a prisoner—he would receive this back pay; otherwise, it would be paid to his dependents upon the official determination that he is dead.

Secretary's Authority

The Act also authorizes the Secretary to make an official determination that a man is dead even if his body is not located. Insurance companies and religious leaders are reported to be in firm accord with provisions of the Act and have cooperated closely with the Services.

Many Vital Service Problems Await Opening of Congress Next Week

MEMBERS OF THE JOURNAL editorial staff present herewith analytical articles concerning top Service legislation which will be considered during the second session of the 82d Congress opening next Tuesday, 8 Jan.

These articles are designed to give the background of the bills. In many instances, a forecast is made of probable results of Senate and House decisions.

Because 1952 is an election year, any legislation which is not brought to a final vote in the session, dies with adjournment. The fact that this is an election year is important; for one thing, Congress will want to adjourn as early as possible, and another, it will strive to make a record for economy.

Throughout the session, THE JOURNAL will keep its readers up-to-the-minute on all Service bills. Detailed articles will interpret complex legislation, certain in 1952 to affect the financial status, careers and welfare of all military personnel and their dependents.

UMT Start In '52

Faces Stern Challenge

The House Armed Services Committee on 15 Jan.—one week after Congress reconvenes—will begin hearings on Universal Military Training.

The National Security Training Commission, set up under the Selective Service Act, has recommended that UMT be launched next Summer on a limited scale with 60,000 18 year-olds. Ultimately, UMT would train 800,000.

Military members of the NSTC were Admiral Thomas C. Kinkaid, USN-Ret., and Lt. Gen. Raymond S. McLain, USA, Comptroller of the Army.

The Commission suggests that the Army train 50 per cent of the National Security Training Corps (400,000); the Air Force, 22 per cent; the Navy and Marine Corps, 28 per cent.

The NSTC, headed by James W. Wadsworth, former New York Senator and Representative, said its study was based on "the fact that the principle of UMT had been accepted by Congress."

The House and Senate Armed Services Committees must report on the recommendations of the Commission within 45 days after Congress reconvenes.

Two steps must be achieved to provide the actual implementation of the UMT program, which the Commission has scheduled tentatively for the summer of 1952.

First, Congress must approve the recommendations of the Commission and funds must be voted for starting the program.

The UMT legislation is certain to result in much discussion on the floor of both the Senate and House. The Armed Services Committees likely will report favorably on the recommendations of the National Security Training Commission, but after that it can be anticipated that considerable controversy will develop.

Some members of Congress are certain to express the opinion that UMT is not necessary so long as Selective Service is in effect.

General of the Army George C. Marshall, while serving as Secretary of Defense, declared frequently that adoption of UMT was essential to provide a foundation for enduring national strength. His UMT presentations to Congress last year were received favorably. It is likely that General Marshall may testify on this matter again.

Proponents of UMT feel that maximum support for the measure from military and civilian leaders will be essential, for in an election year Congress may be particularly hesitant to vote implementation of the UMT program.

There are many who feel that if UMT should fail during the forthcoming session of Congress, having been approved "in principle" during the last session, that its future prospects would be dim, indeed.

Many observers believe that UMT legislation will pass the House, but that it will face a difficult fight in the Senate.

AF Leaders Will Press

For '52 Academy O.K.

Air Force civilian and military leaders, bolstered by Department of Defense support, will press for Congressional endorsement in 1952 of the long-discussed Air Force Academy.

General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, USAF Chief of Staff, has declared that authorization of the Academy is essential to the future of the Air Force. He and other Air Force leaders have stressed that the present 25 per cent allocation to the Air Force of graduates from West Point and Annapolis is not sufficient to meet current needs.

Legislation providing for the establishment of an Air Force Academy was introduced in June 1951, but no action was taken. The bill, however, has a high priority in the House Armed Services Committee.

In April 1949, a Department of Defense (then National Military Establishment) Service Academy Board, headed by Dr. Robert L. Steans, president of the University of Colorado, said an Air Force Academy should be built "without delay." General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower was a member of that board. The Joint Chiefs of Staff favor construction of the academy.

The pending legislation would authorize the Secretary of the Air Force to establish the academy at a temporary location until construction of permanent facilities could be completed—probably in about four years.

The Air Force will call to Congressional attention surveys which show that the number of Regular Air Force officers with college degrees is far less than the number of Regular Army and Navy officers who are college graduates.

Meantime, an Air Force Academy Site Selection Board, headed by General Carl Spaatz, USAF-Ret., former Chief of Staff, has reduced from 354 to 7 the number of possible sites for the academy.

Congress probably will approve the Air Force Academy. It is likely, however, that there will be spirited debate about its location, although the sweeping studies made by General Spaatz's group will help to restrict this inevitable development.

A Marine Corps Bill Will

Pass, But With Controversy

Legislation which will spell increased Congressional prestige for the Marine Corps will be among the first major Service bills to clear Congress, but considerable controversy over specific provisions is foreseen.

The Marine Corps bill, as passed by the Senate, makes the Commandant a "consultant" to the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The Senate authorized a Marine Corps strength of 400,000, but its bill made no stipulation as to a minimum strength.

Sent to the House Armed Services Committee in May, the bill was reported favorably by the House group on 30 June. But at the end of the year the legislation had not been cleared by the House Rules Committee for floor vote.

Undoubtedly, the reason for the unusual delay was the fact that the House Committee made substantial changes in the bill.

As reported by the House group, the bill makes the Marine Corps Commandant a full-fledged member of the JCS and establishes the Marine Corps at a minimum enlisted strength of 300,000.

The Department of Defense has opposed the Marine Corps legislation from the outset. There are persistent reports that if the bill should clear Congress in the form recommended by the House Armed Services Committee the President would veto the measure.

Chairman Carl Vinson (D-Ga.) last week asked the House Rules Committee to give quick approval to a vote on the Marine Corps legislation.

It can be expected that the measure will be voted on during January, but not before there has been strong argumentation both by advocates of the bill and by its opponents who contend that passage would create a "second Army."

There is a possibility that the bill may pass the House as reported by Chairman Vinson's group. This would make necessary compromise action by Senate and House conferees. Conceivably, a final bill might stipulate a 300,000 minimum strength, as urged by the House Committee, and "consultant" status on the JCS for the Marine Corps Commandant, as approved by the Senate.

Reserve Promotion Bill

Has 1 Feb. Deadline

The Pentagon must meet a 1 Feb. deadline for submitting to Congress an all-Service Reserve Promotion Bill.

Work has been in progress for months on the intricate promotion legislation. This measure will complement the Armed Forces Reserve Bill, H.R. 5426, which has passed the House and now awaits action by the Senate Armed Services Committee.

In general, it is believed that the legislation for Reserve promotions will duplicate, insofar as possible, the Officer Personnel Act of 1947.

The legislation is likely to provoke considerable discussion from representatives of such groups as the Reserve Officers Association and the National Guard Association.

It is known, however, that close liaison has been maintained with key Reserve and National Guard officials in the formulation of the proposed legislation.

The probability is that the Reserve Promotion Bill will establish some type of selection system for Reservists which will provide for forced attrition similar to that in the "two pass-overs and out" provision of the Officer Personnel Act.

Passage of the promotion bill is a certainty, but there will probably be much debate as efforts are made to define explicitly the points where Reserve and Regular officers should receive identical consideration for promotion and the points where fundamental differences between the career officer and a member of the civilian components must be taken into account.

Survivors' Benefits Bill

Still Before House Group

Because of the pitifully inadequate pensions provided by the government for the survivors of career officers and enlisted personnel of the Services, the Department of Defense attacked the problem from a different standpoint this Fall by submitting to Congress a plan for a "pay-as-you-go" survivors' benefit bill.

The measure would cost the government nothing, being operated entirely by compulsory deductions from the pay of all active Service personnel who have eligible survivors. When such personnel are retired they have no further rights in the system, but upon passing to the retired list they may elect to participate with that group, the deductions being adjusted in accordance with the higher actuarial rates for that higher age group.

The Kilday Subcommittee of the House Armed Services Committee held 10 hearings on the bill during August and September. The measure was endorsed in principle by the leaders of all of the Services, but its actuarial soundness was questioned by some civilian insurance men. The measure has been revised twice and on each occasion the rates to be deducted from Service pay have been increased.

The Subcommittee reported the measure to the full committee with a recommendation that further hearings be conducted by the latter group.

There is little chance of early action on this measure, inasmuch as the House Committee plans to begin hearings 15 January on the highly controversial UMT bill which will keep it tied up for some time. The Senate Committee has shown no disposition as yet to take up the measure. Some friends of the Service in Congress fear that the institution of a pay-deduction system to provide survivor benefits for Service personnel not only may jeopardize the present small government pensions but may also be a forerunner for the establishment of a self-paid retirement system such as is in force for the Civil Service employees. There is, however, a strong disposition to modify the present system under which survivors of some Reserve officers may receive in excess of $500 a month benefits while widows of Regular personnel are limited to $75 per month.

Necessity for Dependent Housing Legislation

Shown Forcefully in Congress' Own Investigation

Investigations made by the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee and experiences gained by the Department Defense concerning the operation of the Wherry Housing Act during the past two years likely will be brought to Congressional attention during the forthcoming session.

New legislative action is held necessary to prevent additional hardships to members of military families, thousands of whom are either unable to find housing or are forced to pay exorbitant rentals.

The Wherry Housing Act and the Defense Housing Act have been a tremendous help, but Defense officials note the need for further action.

While the Wherry Act has eliminated the need for immediate large appropriations for military housing in the United States, Pentagon authorities relate that the ultimate cost to the Government through appropriations for rental allowances "may be higher than if funds had been appropriated for direct construction in the first place."

Also, in many instances the rentals for Wherry Housing units exceed considerably the allowances paid to military personnel. This is particularly true for enlisted personnel and junior officers.

The Department of Defense adds that in some instances it has not been possible to obtain sponsors for Wherry Housing projects at isolated bases.

The Armed Forces would like therefore to be given authority for limited public works construction of housing units in the United States.

This matter doubtless is one of the first problems under consideration by the newly created Armed Forces Housing Agency, creation of which was recommended in late March of 1950 by the now defunct Department of Defense Housing Commission.

The Agency was not made operational, however, until December when Mr. Thomas P. Coogan was named its director.

With his appointment, however belatedly, it can be hoped that the Department of Defense will be able to formulate adequate housing legislation for action in 1952.

The field investigations made by the Senate Preparedness Committee certainly point the way to remedial action. If the Pentagon can come up with appropriate legislation, the reports of the Preparedness Committee will provide strong documentation.

A carefully developed presentation is essential, for it is certain that real estate interests will oppose any extensive public works housing legislation.

As the new session opens, it is still too early to assess the effectiveness of the Armed Forces Housing Agency. In the past, housing legislation has suffered because of lack of proper planning. It remains to be seen what Mr. Coogan and his associates will be able to accomplish on Capitol Hill in 1952.

Sec. Pace Spurs Pay (Continued from First Page)

month after enactment. The Senate Armed Services Committee is prepared to take up the measure as soon as it is assured of consideration by the House.

In the House, an effort will be made to restore the original 1 July 1951 retroactive date to provide equity with pay legislation passed for civilian employees of the Government during the last session.

Representative Pat Sutton (D-Tenn.) has told THE JOURNAL he will advocate the 1 July date when the pay bill is brought up for debate.

Following is the text of that portion of Secretary Pace's address in which he describes the urgency for a pay boost to men and women in uniform.

Mr. Pace's Statement

"As a former Director of the Bureau of the Budget, I am especially aware of the financial burden of our current military appropriations. Therefore, only the most compelling reasons would inspire me to support strongly the proposed 10 per cent pay raise for all men and women of all ranks in all three Armed Services. I would be disloyal to those who serve you and remiss in my duties as Secretary of the Army if I did not speak out emphatically for a measure to bring some relief to our soldiers whose pay has not kept pace with either civilian pay increase, or the rising cost of living.

"From October 1949 to November 1951, the Consumers Price Index, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, increased by 10.5 per cent. Meanwhile, as you in this audience know so well, executives, workers, and professional men in business and industry have received not one, but several pay raises. As an example, I offer the average weekly wage in all manufacturing industries. According to the U. S. Department of Labor, this wage has gone up 17 per cent since October 1949.

"In my statistical comparison between service and civilian pay, I have not taken into account the 'hidden expenses' peculiar to service life. Many of these expenses have become heavier than ever before because of the Korean conflict and our rapid mobilization.

"Today, for instance, our soldiers are called upon to make frequent changes in station, often on very short notice. Many have had to dispose of houses or other property at a financial loss. Moreover, as an Army wife can tell you, the many incidental expenses connected with moving are rarely covered by government moving allowances.

"Assignments to duty locations where housing is scarce can be prohibitively expensive—especially for enlisted men and younger officers with families.

"The Report on Substandard Housing and Rent Gouging of Military Personnel made by Senator Lyndon Johnson's Committee contains almost incredible evidence of the plight of our soldiers and their families in areas where they have been forced to accept substandard housing because they could afford no better. When assigned to such areas, soldiers have had to select one of two equally distasteful alternatives—to part with their families or move them to quarters which threaten their safety and health.

"As Secretary of the Army, I am equally concerned with the morale of both Reservists and Regulars. If the time should ever come when a Reservist called to active duty looks forward to his Army service as an unbearable financial sacrifice, we would face an impossible task in forging an Army with the spirit and will to win.

"And if the Army's standard of living is permitted to dip to an unsupportable low, we would lose too many of our career officers and soldiers who form the hard core of our Army and give its operations the continuity they must have. I know only too well that money is the least of the motivations which brought these men and women into the Army as a career. They chose their profession, with all its attendant uncertainties and hardships; knowingly and enthusiastically. But there are sacrifices we cannot ask them to make indefinitely."

Army Unit At Benning Lightens The Load

General J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, has told of plans to lighten the load carried by the infantryman, and at Ft. Benning, Ga., tests are underway to diet the combat pack.

Members of the Second Battalion of the 508th Airborne Regimental Combat Team are the guinea pigs in the weight reduction tests. Lt. Col. Herbert V. Mansfield is battalion commander.

Says Colonel Mansfield: "Everyone is talking about lightening the infantry soldier's combat load. But we're the ones who are doing something about it!" Visual proof of this came during recent Camp Rucker, Ala., maneuvers, when the 508th served as the aggressor training aid against the 47th Viking Infantry Division.

Lt. Gen. John R. Hodge, USA, Third Army commander, and Lt. Gen. Frank W. Milburn, USA, along with many other Army officers, viewed the field exercise with a critical eye.

No Back-Pack

The troopers wore no back-pack at all. Instead, they wore a suspender harness to hold up a pistol belt. From the belt hung an entrenching tool, a canteen cover with canteen and cup and and spoon tucked inside.

A poncho, rolled like a hot dog bun, was laced to the back of the belt. Inside the poncho was a towel, extra socks, and a handkerchief. Shaving articles were slipped inside the entrenching tool cover, which was hung from the right side of the belt. A first-aid packet was also attached.

From the suspenders, a plastic-cased flashlight hung, and this will probably dangle alongside grenades in combat.

"When it rains," added Colonel Mansfield, "some of the extras, like socks and towel, will be slipped into the big roomy leg pockets on the field pants. Generally, we like to keep the pockets free for running.

"We're also having some British-type Bren gun suspender pouches made up to carry ammunition," the colonel said.

What about a knife, fork and meat-can? "We don't use 'em," replied Colonel Mansfield. "My men eat all their food out of a canteen cup or C-ration can, us-

College Seeks Books

The Army War College, located in Washington, D. C. until 1941, was re-established in 1950 as the Army's senior school. It is now at Carlisle Barracks, Pa. The College is in process of developing a military library comparable to its old library, which was transferred to the National War College in 1946. The problem of acquiring books and periodicals long out of print is a particularly difficult one. Anyone who has older books and periodicals on military subjects and who might desire to donate them to the Army War College would make a valuable contribution to its educational mission. It is suggested that such persons communicate with the Secretary, Army War College, Carlisle Barracks, Pa.

ing only a spoon. Anything else in the way of eating utensils, such as a meat can, is just extra baggage and something that rattles.

Men Bring New Ideas

"We've noticed that after the men get over the initial shock of not having bulky, cumbersome rolls, blankets and back-packs, they get into the experiment because they see it's all for their own good to ease their combat load. They then start experimenting in little things themselves and come up with ideas of their own."

One of these ideas was the ingenious use of candles to heat fox-holes. Standing in their holes, the troopers would don a poncho, draw it up tight around the neck, spread it over and peg it down around the foxhole. Thus assured that no light would disclose their position to the enemy, they'd light a candle at their feet.

When not in the foxhole situation, the troopers become downright ingenious in escaping the elements. Three will band together, snap three ponchos into a shelter and erect a little tent, utilizing branches for poles. A fourth will join the trio and spread his poncho on the tent floor.

Colonel Mansfield's latest tactical wrinkle is his battalion order: "No tops on jeeps. None on mine, none on yours, so we'll be used to it when we hit combat."

Selection Boards

Army officials report that the board which has been considering permanent first lieutenants for promotion to the permanent rank of captain has completed its work. Nominations will be sent to the Senate after White House approval.

The board reportedly has passed-over approximately 20 officers. Consideration went through Promotion List Number 14957.

A board which will consider officers for permanent promotion to major meets for the first time on 7 Jan. The lieutenant colonels' board will be convened on 11 Feb.

The majors' board will consider officers through No. 9597 and the lieutenant colonels' board will consider officers through No. 5245.

Army Develops New Rifle

A new, fast-firing, light-weight rifle developed by the Army was demonstrated at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., last week, four months after Great Britain staged a similar coming-out party for a new .280-caliber British rifle.

The new U. S. Army weapon fires a .30-caliber cartridge somewhat shorter than that now used in the Garand (M-1), and weighs almost two pounds less. It has, however, lost none of the accuracy or striking power of the M-1. The Army said it is not willing to accept any less powerful cartridge.

Favor Heavier Projectile

Efforts by Great Britain to gain approval for its new .280-caliber rifle were apparently stymied by the Army announcement which read:

"The Army is firmly opposed to the adoption of any less effective smaller caliber cartridge for use in either its present rifle or in the new weapons being developed. Any new rifle cartridge adopted must have the wounding power, penetrating performance and ballistics at least equal to that in use today. Battle experience has proven beyond question the effectiveness of the present rifle and ammunition, and there have been no changes in combat tactics which would justify a reduction of rifle caliber and power.

"The Army considers 'stopping' or wounding power to be the most vital factor in weapon development. Korean combat has re-emphasized the importance of this characteristic. The new light rifles have stopping power equal or superior to any standard military rifles in existence today."

The new rifle weighs eight pounds, compared to the M-1's nine and three-quarter pounds, and it can be used either as a semi-automatic or fully automatic weapon. The new cartridge, designated T-65E3, is about one-half inch shorter than the present .30 caliber cartridge which measures 3.34-inches. In appearance, the rifle resembles the Garand, but it carries a 20-cartridge clip as opposed to the 8-cartridge clip on the Garand. The reduction in weight resulted from a cut in size of the firing mechanism used in handling the smaller cartridge.

Efficient Performance

The Army pointed out that "in the hands of a skilled marksman the M-1 rifle in semi-automatic fire will deliver 34 hits per minute on a man-sized target at 100 yards," and that this can be increased "to 48 with the new rifle." Firing fully automatic, and using a larger magazine, the new rifle has discharged 100 rounds per minute. The Army said that 700 rounds per minute could be discharged from the rifle if it had a large enough magazine.

The T-65E3 cartridge, the Army said, will penetrate "the best steel helmets at ranges beyond 1200 yards," as well as "both sides of a truck body at half that range." The newly developed British .280 is believed by American experts to have less striking power because of its light-weight ammunition.

The demonstration, staged on the eve of Mr. Churchill's departure from England for a visit with President Truman, heightened conjecture that adoption of a standard rifle and ammunition for the North Atlantic Treaty Nations will be on the discussion lists of the two leaders.

New Rifle

Brigadier C. Aubrey Dixon, O.B.E., Retired, who was one of the leaders in the team which designed and developed the British .280-inch cartridge, accused the United States of being over-secretive in regard to ordnance developments.

Writing in the January issue of the American Rifleman, Brigadier Dixon states, "After the conclusion of the war we continued freely to send to the States all information about our plans and developments, including the minutes of the meetings and details of the trials fired by the ideal caliber panel [a small arms group established by the British Ministry of Supply to decide on an ideal small arms cartridge], but we received no information whatsoever in return."

He states that in 1947, when the report of the panel was published, it was "rushed by hand to the States for a free discussion." At that time, he says, "the first U. S. lightweight automatic rifle, firing the T-65 cartridge, of which we had been told nothing, was actually being put through its first trials."

The British armament expert declares that the team which took the panel report to the U. S. "received rather a mauling at the hands of the Ordnance Department."

Agreements reached by the U. S. and Great Britain at that time have been adhered to by the British, Brigadier Dixon says, "even to the point when they declared their intention of adopting a 0.280-inch caliber lightweight automatic rifle."

He points out that the new British rifle bullet "will penetrate steel helmets at 1,000 yards range, and its penetration of wooden blocks at the same range was such that its performance was better than the service 0.303-inch bullet with which we successfully fought two wars, and only slightly inferior to the service 0.30-inch bullet firing in the Garand. One would not expect the T-65 or shortened 30-'06 cartridge to be any better if as good."

He also states that the new British rifle "can be subjected to a raging sandstorm and severe mud tests and can still fire afterwards," then he asks, "Can the T-65 pass these tests?"

In conclusion, Brigadier Dixon emphasizes that the ultimate aim is to get the best possible rifle into the hands of British and U. S. troops and whether it be the .28 caliber or the .30 caliber, "let the technical experts decide."

.280 in Abeyance

Mr. Churchill only last month stalled off an attempt to put the new British rifle into production. In an address in the House of Commons on 6 Dec., he said he is "not at all sure that it is in our interest to embark single-handed on a lonely venture, even if that rifle (the British .280) is better than others put before us."

The Prime Minister, in answer to questions put to him by House members, said he was not "thinking of accepting the existing American pattern" (the M-1) but that Britain has to continue with its existing rifle "until we reach a conclusion about a new rifle, which I hope may be reached with common agreement between all the powers concerned."

He said, "The changeover from one pattern of rifle to another must . . . be a very lengthy process, which could not be even partially effective in under six or seven years. During this period, an additional burden would be placed on our resources of labour and materials, already so heavily strained, if there were two kinds of rifles in the British Forces."

He continued, "... A decision to re-arm with the new rifle is one of high policy, involving the world situation and the position of our Allies. Standardization, not only of rifles, but of other weapons, must be regarded as a cardinal principle and aim among the Atlantic Powers. . . . Every effort should therefore be made, in changes which can take place only so very slowly, to achieve agreement and convergence of thought on new types."

In Technical Dispute

Mr. Churchill said that "it may well be" that Britain now has "the best rifle and ammunition yet made," but that although he had had an opportunity to fire both the British and American weapons he was not "a technical expert in these matters at all" and that they "are matters of technical dispute."

The Prime Minister revealed that Britain has only 20 of the new .280 rifles at present. He said if re-tooling were carried out in conformance with the plans of the late Labor Government that production on the new rifle could begin in 1953 and by the end of 1954 Great Britain should be producing the rifle at the rate of about 100,000 a year. "But," he said, "the pool we should like to swim in would be over two million."

He pointed out that "in the light of these considerations . . . a final decision should not be taken hastily. Indeed, I think it is our duty on both sides of the Atlantic to make new efforts to harmonize our long-term policy."

U. S. Army ordnance experts are also aware of the immense problem posed by re-tooling for production of a new weapon. A multi-million dollar order was placed recently by the Defense Department for continued production of the M-1, and it was made clear during the Aberdeen demonstration that the new light-weight rifle will not go into quantity production at this time.

Launch Hunter-Killer

The Navy late last week launched a new hunter-killer ship which is so radically different from its sister vessels that no data—except for length and tonnage—has been released on it since it was first authorized in 1947.

The new ship, USS Norfolk, has been given the designation DL-1, which stands for "destroyer leader," a type name never before employed by the Navy. Originally the vessel was designated CLK-1, which stood for cruiser-killer. The first intimation that the designation of the submarine stalker had been changed came on 29 Dec., when Vice Adm. William M. Callaghan, Military Sea Transport Commander, spoke at the Camden, N. J. launching ceremonies. Reading a speech prepared by Admiral William M. Fechter, Chief of Naval Operations, he said, "In just a few moments a new type of naval vessel will seek its natural element. The first six thousand ton destroyer leader is about to be launched."

Tonnage of Cruisers

Although classified with the destroyers, the Norfolk is larger than the new Mitscher type DD's. Its tonnage equals that of cruisers of the Juneau, Oakland and San Diego class, and its overall length—540 feet—is one foot less than ships of these classes. Admiral Callaghan said the new ship has "great potentiality."

Two vessels of this size were authorized in 1947, and the Norfolk was ordered in November of the following year. Construction of the second ship was deferred in 1949.

Admiral Callaghan said in addition to preserving and adapting ships we now have, "we must build new ones of different characteristics and greater capabilities."

U. S. NAVY & MARINE CORPS

Prior to the launching of the USS Norfolk at the Camden, N. J. yards of the New York Shipbuilding Company, Vice Adm. W. M. Callaghan, USN, Commander Military Sea Transport Service, meets Miss Betty King Duckworth, center, sponsor of the new Naval Vessel and daughter of the Mayor of Norfolk, Va., her two attendants, Miss Patricia King, left, and Miss Anna Belle Griffin, right. Mr. Thomas Bossert, President of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation is at the right.

ferent characteristics and greater capabilities." He pointed out that the Navy is glad to get the new destroyer leader since "There have been very few combatant surface ships launched in recent years." He said, "We shall keep it well and use it well. I look forward with eagerness to the time some eight months hence when it will be placed in full commission as an effective fighting unit of our Fleet."

Form Killer Force

Coincidental with the launching, the Navy announced late last week from Norfolk that a new hunter-killer unit is being formed there. To be commanded by Rear Adm. John P. Whitney, the new organization will be known as Hunter-Killer Forces, Atlantic. It will be composed of 10 carriers, two destroyer squadrons, nine ASW (anti-submarine warfare) plane squadrons, blimps and patrol planes, and submarines for training purposes.

The Navy said about 20,000 officers and men have been trained for the new force, which will develop new tactics and techniques in the anti-submarine warfare program.

Nine carriers assigned to the command include the Siboney (which will be used as Admiral Whitney's flagship), the Block Island, Cabot, Kula Gulf, Mindoro, Palau, Saipan, Solerno Bay, and the Wright, all of which are now in the active fleet. Another carrier which will be assigned to the command is the Monterey, now in a commissioned status in the Reserve Fleet.

Neither the destroyer squadrons, nor the submarines were listed by the Navy, but the nine ASW plane groups are Air Anti-Submarine Squadrons 22, 24, 26, 27, 31, 32, 801, 831 and 931.

Advertisers in The Journal support the Armed Forces and are familiar with their requirements.

Marine Integration

The Marine Corps has issued follow-up instructions on its plan to integrate Reserve officers into the regular Marine Corps, pointing out that applications are "not desired until solicited."

The plan to integrate 1,000 Reserve officers was approved recently by the Defense Secretary subject to further approval of detailed internal plans and necessary Presidential regulations. Marine Corps Headquarters said that "these are being developed as a matter of priority" and "upon their approval, a detailed program will be promulgated at the earliest date and applications solicited."

Although no further details are available at this time, the Corps said that the present intention is "to adjust grade and lineal precedence of Reserve officers who accept Regular second lieutenant commissions to that of contemporaries later integrated."

Marine Release Plans

The Marine Corps has outlined plans to effect the further release of Reserves during February.

Officers eligible for release next month are those in priorities one and three, who were assigned to active duty prior to 10 Oct. 1950, and those in priority two who were assigned to active duty prior to 29 Aug. 1950.

Priority three officers who were assigned to active duty before 1 March 1951, and priority four officers assigned to active duty prior to 1 Nov. 1950, who desire to be retained on active duty in accordance with Almar 18, should submit requests not later than 31 Jan., the Marine Corps said.

The Corps has authorized an extension of the February release period for personnel in combat committed units "for reasons for urgent military necessity" provided that all of those who are eligible are transferred, prior to the end of the period in which they are due for release, from such units to appropriate casual or ships detachments, or similar units, for subsequent transportation to the Continental U. S.

Gen. Coffman To Command New Marine Supply Depot

Brig. Gen. Raymond P. Coffman, Jr., will command the new Marine Corps Depot of Supplies at Albany, Ga.

At present General Coffman is Chief of the Supply Branch and Executive Officer of the Supply Department, Marine Corps Headquarters in Washington, D. C. He will leave Washington about 10 Jan. for Albany where he will organize and activate the new major logistical establishment.

The Depot will cover 3,500 acres, and will function as an area supply and repair center for all classifications of material. In addition, it will include a Supply Training School for Marines.

A veteran of 29 years' service in the Marine Corps, General Coffman was born at Phoenixville, Pa., on 19 Dec. 1899. He attended the U. S. Naval Academy and was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps upon graduation in June 1922.

During World War II, he served as Division Quartermaster of the First Marine Division on Guadalcanal and Tulagi, and was awarded the Legion of Merit for "exceptionally meritorious conduct."

A graduate of the Marine Corps Basic School Course and the Industrial College of the Armed Forces, General Coffman has served in his present assignment since July 1951.

Marine Clothing Allowance

The initial monetary clothing allowance for Marine enlisted men was changed this week to $224.62. There was no change for women.

At the same time, the Marine Corps said the standard maintenance allowance for men will be $6.60, and the basic maintenance allowance remains the same.

Changes in the prices of certain clothing articles were also announced. Summer garrison caps will sell for $.50; winter garrison caps for $1.30; coat, wool green, $22.85; utility coats, $2.50; leather gloves, $3.00; jacket, wool, green, $23.75; raincoat M-50, $12.00, without liner (the liner will sell for $6.00); cotton khaki shirts, $2.50; flannel shirts, $7.10; low quarter shoes, $6.50; khaki service trousers, $3.75; green trousers, $12.75; and utility trousers, $2.75.

Prices for smaller items include: web belt, $.40; green cap cover, $1.65; drawers, $.45; necktie, $.65; and cotton undershirts, $.45.

Award to Maj. Silverthorn

Maj. Merwin H. Silverthorn, Jr., son of the assistant commandant of the Marine Corps, has been awarded the Bronze Star Medal for meritorious service in Korea. His father, Lt. Gen. M. H. Silverthorn, is serving as next in command to General Clifton B. Bates at Marine Corps Headquarters.

Major Silverthorn was cited for his work as executive officer of an infantry battalion in Korea from 1 May to 18 June 1951. He is now serving in the operations section of the First Marine Division in Korea.

Navy Budget Expert to Sea

Rear Adm. Herbert G. Hopwood, one of the Navy's top experts on budget matters, has been assigned to an undisclosed sea billet.

A 1919 graduate of the Naval Academy, the 53-year-old officer has served the Navy in connection with budget matters since 1946. Originally Director of Budget and Reports, he is currently serving as Deputy Comptroller of the Navy.

and two fire stations, and a 350-bed infirmary.

The facilities include water, power and heating plants, a sewage disposal system, a bank, a railroad and an automatic dial telephone system.

And—most impressive of all—is the huge overhaul and repair structure with all its equipment. Costing more than $5,000,000, this aircraft and engine workshop is considered one of the most up-to-date repair plants in the naval world.

Started in '41

Cherry Point was started in 1941, when World War II was beginning to engulf the globe. It was part of a grand plan to build up US power, provide the Marine Corps with a base to train its pilots in the Corps' specialty, to train ground crews and to repair and maintain all types of aircraft—as well as to serve as a base of defense for the eastern coast of the United States.

The area was selected because of its strategic coastal location, its proximity to Camp Lejeune, and, also, because of its undeveloped nature, which afforded ample room for future expansion.

The transformation of the swampy breeding place for mosquitoes into a modern nesting place for military aircraft was begun August 5, 1941, when engineers began looking over the place.

Actual construction of the landing field was started just 17 days before the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor. And a little less than four months later, Col. T. J. Cushman initiated flight operations here by making the first landing on the strip which was named Cunningham field, after the first Marine aviator.

Cushman, by the way, is here again, as a major general, in command of Aircraft Fleet Marine Force, Atlantic, and the Second Marine Air Wing.

WWII Expansion

As World War II progressed, the base became increasingly important and continued to grow until, at one time, while serving as a graduate school for Marine fliers, it housed more than 20,000 Marines.

During the peak of its wartime service, the base also was home to some 2,500 Women Marines, who filled many essential jobs which formerly had been reserved for men.

At the end of the war, the base, like others throughout the nation, settled down to a new, reduced "peacetime" strength. Each year, however, during the summer it hummed as during the war, when Marine reservists descended on it for their two weeks of active duty.

When the fighting in Korea began, Cherry Point assumed its former importance as a finishing school for Marine fliers readying for combat. Many of the reservists who had been here during the peacetime years, returned for more intense refresher courses, before heading west to the Pacific.

With the start of the Korean fighting, women Marines, who had been missing from the station for several years, began returning also. The detachment still is increasing in strength daily.

Home of 2d MAW

Cherry Point at present is the home of the Second Marine Air Wing, trained and still training in the Marine Corps aviation specialty—close support for ground troops.

It is also the home now of two helicopter units, recently formed to train for transporting men in and out of combat areas and to experiment in new techniques for advances by air.

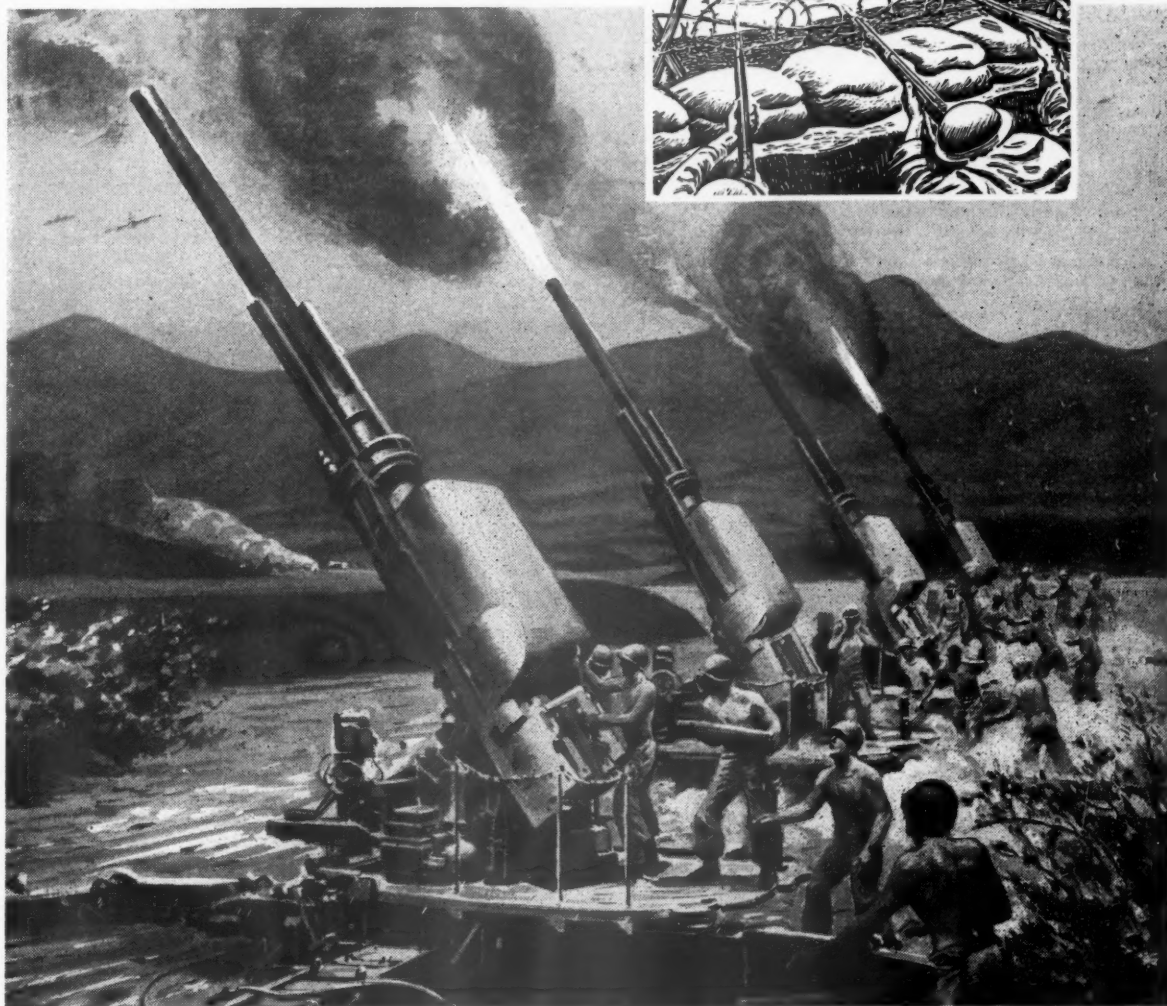

The training program is a rigid one, but one which allows time for recreation and furnishes the tools as well as the time for self-improvement projects.

The station has a baseball field, eight softball fields, a football field, three touch football fields, an 18-hole golf course, 15 tennis courts, 14 volleyball courts, two swimming pools, a magnificent movie house and clubs for personnel of all grades.

Educational opportunities include courses at high school, junior college, and college levels, offered through the extension division of the Eastern Carolina College, the Marine Corps Institute and the Armed Forces Institute.

The program makes for Marines who are well-adjusted, well-informed and well-trained.

Electronics puts real sting in modern ground defenses

Today's high-level, high-speed aerial attack imposes ever-increasing burdens on ground defenses. Only electronics can supply the split-second action now demanded for effective antiaircraft gunnery. During thirty-three years of collaboration with our Armed Forces, Arma has developed the matchless research and engineering skills required to design, improve and produce many of the complex instruments that keep our naval, military and aerial weapons abreast of constantly changing target problems.

The first photograph of the XB-52, Air Force eight-jet heavy bomber, was made public by the U. S. Air Force, 30 Dec., as engine run-ups of the aircraft have begun at Seattle, Wash. The XB-52 had been under camouflage since it was rolled out from the Boeing factory on 29 Nov. In releasing the photograph, Air Force Secretary Thomas K. Flying Test Team Returns

Continental Air Command's "Flying Test Team" is back at its home base, Mitchell AFB, N. Y., following the administering of experimental Air Force Job Knowledge Tests to nearly 400 airmen at four southeastern Air bases.

Along with JKT's in 38 Air Force career fields recently given to 200 Mitchell airmen there, the Flying Test Team administered tests to 70 airmen at Pope AFB, Ft. Bragg, N. C., 81 at Shaw AFB, Sumter, S. C., 90 at Donaldson AFB, Greenville, S. C., and 154 at Langley AFB, Hampton, Va.

Aboard the B-25 Mitchell test plane were First Lt. John Simons, pilot and head of the ConAC Test Development Branch's JKT flying team, S/Sgt. Robert Hasaka and Sgt. Ralph Wilson.

Crew of the B-25 test plane, with Lieutenant Simons as first pilot, includes copilot Capt. Gottlieb F. Von Kaenel and Engineer S/Sgt. Donald Alken.

Part of a country-wide project being carried out by the Continental, Air Materiel, and Air Training Commands to acquire statistical information for use in speedy and efficient classification of recalled airmen in event of mobilization, the tests are designed to measure an airman's knowledge acquired both through Air Force service and civilian experience.

Restudy Hawaiian Training

Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, Jr., has informed Senator Lyndon Johnson (D-Tex.) that a reexamination is being made of the current training of some recruits in Hawaii.

Senator Johnson, whose Preparedness Subcommittee had criticized the basic training activities in Hawaii, said he was "very happy" to learn that Secretary Pace is reconsidering "this costly program."

Must Confirm Generals

The promotions of five Air Force general officers will be subject to Senate confirmation when Congress reconvenes next week.

Four officers were nominated late in the first session of the 82d Congress, but could not be confirmed before the recess. Subsequently, they were given recess appointments by the President. They are Generals John K. Cannon, Curtis LeMay and Benjamin W. Chidlaw, Commanding Generals, respectively, of the Tactical, Strategic and Air Defense Commands. The fourth officer is Lt. Gen. Laurence S. Kuter, Deputy Chief of Staff, Personnel.

Also serving under recess appointment is Lt. Gen. Frank Everest, Commanding General, Fifth Air Force.

AF Wing to France

Early departure of the 117th Tactical Reconnaissance Wing for duty in France with General of the Army Dwight D.

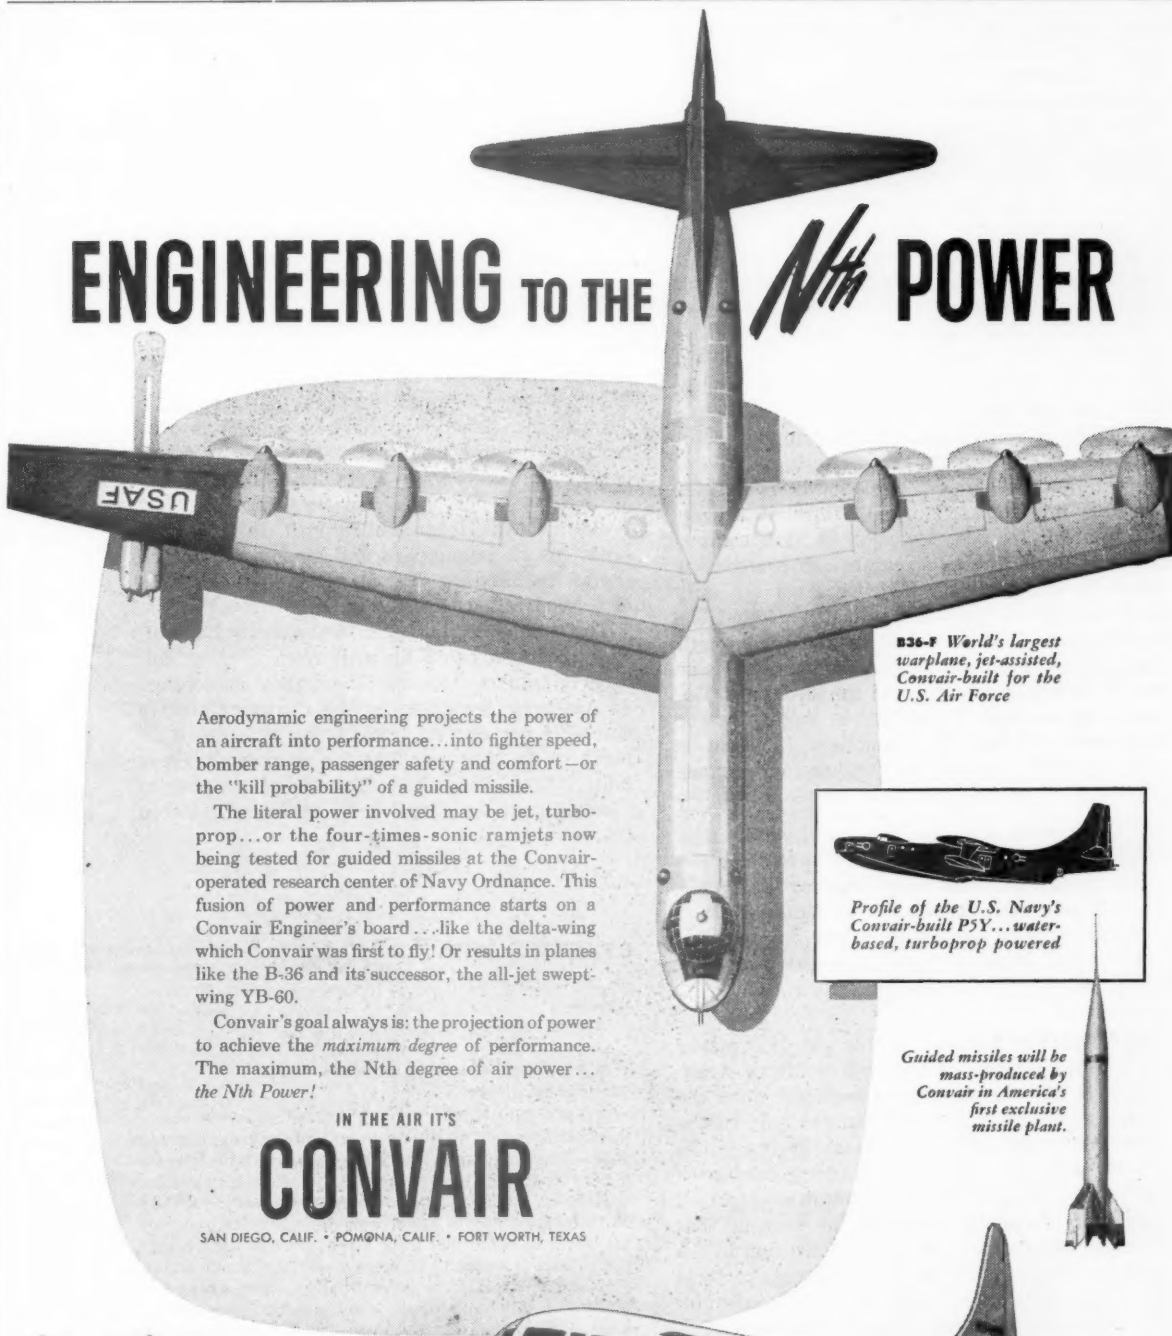

Eisenhower's NATO forces was announced this week by General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, USAF Chief of Staff.

Equipped with RB-26 Douglas Invaders and RF-80 Shooting Stars, the 117th is a former Air National Guard unit ordered into active service in October 1950. Its commander is Col. Dixon M. Allison of Atlanta, Ga.

Now completing operational training at Lawson AFB, Ft. Benning, Ga., the 117th is the first USAF reconnaissance wing to be assigned to Allied Air Forces, Central Europe, commanded by Lt. Gen. Lauris Norstad, USAF.

Early in November, the 126th Bomb Wing, Light, was sent to France.

ENGINEERING TO THE Nth POWER

B36-F World's largest warplane, jet-assisted, Convair-built for the U.S. Air Force

Aerodynamic engineering projects the power of an aircraft into performance...into fighter speed, bomber range, passenger safety and comfort—or the "kill probability" of a guided missile.

The literal power involved may be jet, turbo-prop...or the four-times-sonic ramjets now being tested for guided missiles at the Convair-operated research center of Navy Ordnance. This fusion of power and performance starts on a Convair Engineer's board...like the delta-wing which Convair was first to fly! Or results in planes like the B-36 and its successor, the all-jet swept-wing YB-60.

Convair's goal always is: the projection of power to achieve the maximum degree of performance. The maximum, the Nth degree of air power... the Nth Power!

CONSOLIDATED VULTEE AIRCRAFT CORPORATION

"Adequate military strength in the present world situation involves the maintenance of armed forces sufficient to deter aggression and a considerable increase in their ability for immediate large expansion."
—GENERAL OF THE ARMY GEORGE C. MARSHALL.

Economy and Defense. All factors point to a stringent tightening of both the Budget and the Appropriations for National Defense in the Second Session of the 82d Congress opening next Tuesday, 8 Jan. The national election in November carries its unwritten requirement that there be no increase in taxes and that the political parties vie with each other in reducing expenditures. The quieting down of the War in Korea and the prospect of some sort of cease fire agreement remove some of the outward evidences of urgency and make it easier to curtail the build-up now in progress.

It is discomfiting to read that the Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, Representative Clarence Cannon (D-Mo), is falling in line with this trend. He seemingly regrets the amounts appropriated to the Armed Forces for the current fiscal year. "We gave the Joint Chiefs of Staff everything they wanted," he said. "We had no other choice. . . . We had to vote a blank defense check." (Actually this "blank check" was $740,057,670 below the budget estimates.) "Now," says Mr. Cannon, "we have the leisure to take a look at that money and what was done with it, before we vote any more."

What must be avoided is the beginning of another downward trend in that "alternate cycle of strength and weakness" against which former Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall repeatedly warned. In today's world, we cannot afford to permit a decline in strength. To protect our nation in tomorrow's world, we must not only have ready power but we should also have a UMT plan, such as that presented by the Wadsworth Commission, to build a pool of trained manpower and we should continue to so shape our production program that it will at the same time be broadening our base of production. It would be poor economy, indeed, to weaken our Armed Forces.

The watch dogs of Senator Lyndon B. Johnson's Preparedness Subcommittee could find some real "cost consciousness" if they would interview Service wives. Nothing like trying to meet mounting prices on yesterday's pay scales to make a person budget-minded!

150 Years of Service. In this year that marks the sesquicentennial of the U. S. Military Academy it is well for the people to reflect upon the contributions of that institution not only to the military defense but to the national life as a whole.

Fifty years ago, when the Academy celebrated its 100th anniversary, THE JOURNAL reported President Theodore Roosevelt as stating that "during that century, no other institution in the land has contributed so many names as West Point has contributed to the honor roll of the Nation's greatest citizens." It is not generally realized that in addition to its great role of military leaders the Military Academy has also furnished thousands of leaders in civilian life. One has been president of the United States and one president of the Confederate States, 17 have been ambassadors or ministers to foreign nations, 26 have been members of Congress, 686 have been presidents or vice presidents of railroads or other large corporations, 81 have been bank officers, and so, on and on, they have taken part in the growth and progress of the nation.

And yet, from its establishment in 1802 after having been frequently recommended by George

SATURDAY, 5 JANUARY 1952

Washington, the Academy has weathered hard times. In the beginning the salaries provided by Congress were so small that one man had to be permitted to teach two subjects and draw two pays in order to attract instructors. In 1812 it had neither instructors nor cadets and only the war of that year prevented the Secretary of War, William Eustis, from abolishing it. In 1819 Congress cut off its supplies and money and on the eve of the Mexican War an attempt in Congress to close it failed.

The Academy graduates in the Army have always been balanced by men from civilian colleges or from civilian life. The highest percentage of Academy graduates in the Corps of officers was 63.4 per cent in 1899; today it is about 25 per cent. It is proper that the sources of officer material be diversified. Yet the principles of "Duty Honor Country," as so zealously fostered

What About Warrant Officers?

EDITOR, THE JOURNAL:

The Warrant Officer, though praised as a very essential individual of highly technical skill through many years of training and experience, seems to have become a very good fall guy doing all the work but getting as little as possible done for him to keep him pacified. In 1949 there was to have been some definite program set up so he could feel he is a real part of the Service, but to date it seems to be merely words without action. I'll take it back, they have finally gotten around to making a few promotions months after both officers and enlisted men were considered, reconsidered and well taken care of.

After two years still no definite status has been given the most deserving Warrant Officer but officers have received in a majority of cases promotion and re-promotion. Now I see in your "Service News and Gossip" column a bill realigning Reserve Promotions with Regular Army Promotions, etc. This bill was conceived and processed in less than six months, yet after two years almost an equal number of Warrant Officers can't get consideration either as to better and permanent status or as to pay.

I've no particular complaint myself but I would like to see more definite and permanent warrant status and would like to see something done for the younger Warrant Officer so we can get them to want to stay in the service and properly compensated. CWO at West Point, are proudly those of the Army and the Nation.

Secretary Pace's Support. All of the Armed Forces can be grateful to Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, jr. for his forthright address at New Orleans, La., in which he documents the need for passage of the 10 per cent cost-of-living pay increase, combat pay, and UMT. During his service as Army Secretary, Mr. Pace has gained wide acclaim for his devotion to problems of morale. His New Orleans speech is a reassurance not only to members of the Army, but to all men and women in uniform that the Department of Defense will make a strong presentation in their behalf when Congress reconvenes next week. Mr. Pace notes that as former Director of the Bureau of the Budget he is particularly aware of the need for economy in Government. In view of his background, this strong advocacy of the pay increase, Combat Pay and UMT bills will be particularly effective on Capitol Hill. Military morale has been bolstered by the Army Secretary's speech.

IN THE JOURNAL

10 Years Ago

The War Department reports the entrance of advance elements of Japanese troops into Manila at 3 p.m., 2 Jan. (Manila time). American and Philippine troops were withdrawn several days ago. The Navy Department simultaneously announced evacuation of Cavite.

50 Years Ago

The necessity for more permanent quarters for our troops stationed in the Philippines is one which will require serious attention if the American soldier is to remain in the islands. In most towns the troops now use the former convents as barracks. But soon the question of church ownership will come up.

85 Years Ago

Two bills are now before Congress, one to abolish the Marine Corps and one to create the grade of Brigadier General Commandant. Those most interested entertain no fear as to the fate of the first bill. The history of the Corps and its service have been too prominent to admit of a doubt in this matter.

Where's The Unification?

EDITOR, THE JOURNAL:

When Congress gets around to studying those much-reported 47 areas of difference in the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, maybe some consideration could be given to a current injustice. When Navy and Marine Corps officers are retired, they are advanced a rank if they have a combat decoration. But that doesn't hold true for Army and Air Force officers.

Granted, no pay benefits result, but the higher rank does have a value. First of all, the retired officer is given a token of recognition for achievements in combat. And secondly, in these times when so many retired officers are filling important jobs in industry and in local and State offices, the increased rank is a definite advantage.

If it's good for the Navy and Marine Corps, why not the Army and Air Force too?

Defense Budget Cuts Stir Editorial Comment

CONSIDERABLE discussion was aroused in editorials and columns over the holidays by Defense Secretary Robert A. Lovett's announced plans to cut the military budget for the fiscal year 1953.

Much of the comment which favored the cut—and this constituted the bulk of press material available—was apparently influenced in some degree by the recent Senate Preparedness Subcommittee reports charging that there is waste in the Armed Services.

The Omaha World-Herald states that the Senate Subcommittee revelations "should be enough to convince most Americans that (1) military spending costs a lot more than it should, (2) that it is a matter that cannot be entrusted to military men alone, and (3) that unification of the armed forces is so far a fantastically expensive joke."

Other papers agreed. The Cincinnati Enquirer takes the Air Force to task for its part in the reported wastage, but contends that since it is the youngest of the services it has not had time to build up sound business practices. In the neighboring state of Indiana, the Indianapolis News declares "It is high time the Pentagon cracked down—not only on its own padded establishment—but on the services afield. A public which is paying for defense to the tune of $60 billion this fiscal year is entitled to something better than plush personnel living for its money." The Star, in the same city, hopes "Congress will not again permit the President to shove through more money than the Defense Department can spend."

Further West, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch points out that "If defense spending is pushed so high that a 'disastrous' inflation 'gets under way, the dollars appropriated for defense will buy fewer planes, tanks and other 'hardware' than we expect them to." In Sioux Falls, S. D., the Argus-Leader declares that the attitude of military authorities who permit waste of men and supplies "is detrimental to the defense program" because it provokes "criticism instead of public approval of the armed forces." The Phoenix, Arizona Republic is also stern in its comment. It states that "War, and preparations for war, are naturally wasteful," but that "waste engendered by a desire for military luxury can be eliminated" and that the Senate Subcommittee "should keep up its good work as watchdog for the taxpayer."

Another paper which agreed that the subcommittee "is on the right track" was the Denver Post, which says "We cannot afford to squander either manpower or dollars." In Texas, the Houston Post is somewhat more tolerant. It states that "In view of the international uncertainties, consideration of a military budget for the future must necessarily lead to the most tentative conclusions. Much depends on whether the outlook for peace improves or worsens between now and 1954."

Back East, the Wall St. Journal proposes an alternative to taxation in reaching a realistic budget balance, by reducing "government expenditure on non-essential or postponable activities while the government feels obliged to spend still unnumbered billions for the national security." Such a step, the paper said, would incur some political risks for the party responsible but "must attract many times the number of votes it repels."

The Buffalo Courier-Express says the growing pressure to quit squandering public funds needlessly "is an encouraging trend."

European Army Plan Seen As Progressing

DESPITE criticisms from a dozen sources, ranging from DeGaulle in France, Schumacher in Germany, the Belgian opposition, and skeptical Britons, all the way to Communist leaders in Italy, the European Army embryo appears to be growing. With impressive disregard for the gloomier prophets, the six nations' foreign ministers agreed this week on the bulk of the recommendations they will lay before their several governments. So important an adviser in their planning as General Eisenhower expressed himself as "delighted by the progress they are making."

The recommendations are for a European assembly, which would serve as a transitional authority, to study the principles of a true federal structure, and make its own report to the six governments. This has to do with the political aspects of European unity and it obviously contemplates a long period of cogitation. But the program for a European Army is intended to move more swiftly, in order to open the way as soon as possible for admission of 12 German divisions to the proposed 43-division establishment (14 French, 12 Italian, and five Benelux divisions); the Army (a component of General Eisenhower's command) would be directed in the transition period by the several governments, coordinating their efforts through a defense board responsible to the six foreign ministers. It patently is much too early to attempt that forfeiture of sovereignty which naturally is the main barrier to the full grown European Union. Yet MM. Pleven, Schuman, Adenauer, and de Gasperi look hopefully toward its ultimate attainment, and are staking their political futures on the steps they now take with impressive confidence.

The European Union and the European Army alike would certainly benefit from more substantial encouragement than the British Government has yet given, or seems likely to give. Prime Minister Churchill, Foreign Minister Anthony Eden, and a considerable group of military, economic, and fiscal advisers are due in Washington at the weekend, and it is obvious that these continental strivings will be discussed at the White House meetings with President Truman and his own advisers. The question is, rather, about the finality of the discussions on this and the numerous other subjects in prospect—Iran, Suez, Soviet relations, atomic energy, and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's command structure, Britain's own economic prospects. As remarked a week ago, Mr. Churchill is too old a hand to risk demands which he knows will not be granted, or even those which could provoke hard feelings between the two great allies of the west. It seems to be established that Britain's economic needs are fully appreciated here and that $300,000,000 will be allotted from the current fund.

Unfortunately as was last summer's cancellation of the all-but-agreed plan for the Atlantic Area command, it is improbable that Mr. Churchill can bring himself to yield on that touchy matter of who rules the waves these days. The greater yearning is for single-minded handling of the more urgent issues in the Middle East, and on these Iranian and Egyptian policies it is probable a great deal will be said at the White House, whether any firm agreements are made or not. Nor can the Far East be ignored. If Korean problems seem to be working toward solution, the same cannot be said for Indo-China, or Burma, or perhaps the Malay Peninsula; on the contrary, if Communist China should be free to withdraw large troop elements from North Korea and Manchuria, it seems likely they will reappear on the Indo-China frontier, and all of this has a very close bearing on the plans of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization itself.

Mr. Churchill's visit to the United States and Canada (he will visit the Dominion before returning to Washington for his speech before Congress on 17 January) will provide him with a chance to observe the thinking of the public, as well as officialdom, on some of these large issues. Meantime political dispute in Britain has subsided appreciably, with even the sharpest of opposition orators apparently disposed to wait for Mr. Churchill's return to Westminster, with a report of accomplishments, before renewing battle.

Bilateral negotiations between Washington and Madrid will be started within a fortnight, looking toward an agreement for the provision of Mutual Security aid. The agreement will deal with purely military matters—what aid we are to give (Please turn to Page 573)

WORLD OUTLOOK BETTER FOR '52

THE opening of 1952 finds international tension still serious, but somewhat less acute than a year ago. On the surface differences between Russia and her satellites on one side, and the non-Communist countries, particularly the big western powers, are as wide and as deep as ever. However, despite aggravation of numerous incidents, there appeared to be general agreement that there was considerable less likelihood of an early outbreak of a new world war than there was a year ago. This improvement seems to have been largely due to Allied successes in Korea and to progress in rebuilding the defenses of Atlantic Pact countries against the threat of Communist aggression. Secretary General Trygve Lie of the United Nations spoke with cautious optimism of the better relations prevailing at the Paris meeting of the General Assembly, while United States Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson said that if the chances of war a year ago were fifty-fifty, the chances against war during the current year might be regarded as sixty-forty.

In January 1951 United Nations troops in Korea were reeling back from the tremendous onslaught of hordes of Chinese Red troops, and the more pessimistic observers doubted the ability of the greatly outnumbered Allies to retain even a small foothold on the Korean peninsula. Today Allied forces are deep in enemy territory, and more than a million and a half Red soldiers are estimated as casualties of the fighting. These losses prompted the Reds, through the agency of the Russian delegate to the United Nations, to propose a truce conference. For a half year sessions of such a conference have been intermittently held at Kaesong and Panmunjom, and some small progress toward an armistice has been made. The most important advance has been the release of names of Allied prisoners held by the Reds, and provision for exchange of mail for these men. Whether or not an armistice is ultimately concluded there is no longer any doubt that United Nations forces in Korea are strong enough to stop any major offensive action.

Soviet Delegate Andrei Vishinsky this week proposed to the General Assembly of the United Nations that the Korean question be again considered by the Security Council, a proposal that will not find acceptance in the west, since it will give Russia the opportunity to exercise its veto power.

► ELSEWHERE IN THE FAR EAST progress was made during the year in the containment of the Reds, and the danger of the Communists overrunning all South-east Asia is somewhat less menacing. Chinese Reds have failed to attempt to carry out their oft-repeated threat to invade Formosa, where Chinese Nationalist troops under Chiang Kai-shek are being trained and re-equipped with the assistance of an American military mission.

In Indo-China the military situation, though still serious, has greatly improved over a year ago. Re-organized French and native troops are limiting the activities of Red guerrillas to occasional incursions into the rich rice-producing areas. A strong native force is being developed under French leadership, which is apparently capable of coping with local Red uprisings, but which would not be able to stop a Chinese Red invasion without the assistance of a strong international force. During the year Communist irregulars, though active, gained few successes in Burma, Malaya and the Philippines.

Western European unity against Communist aggression was materially strengthened in 1951 under American leadership. Military and economic security of non-Communist countries was improved substantially, and the threat of a major war in Europe, though still evident, had diminished to such an extent as to prompt some European statesmen to question the urgency of the current rearmament program. Only in the Near East had the international situation seriously deteriorated during the year. The arbitrary seizure of British-owned oil properties, and the unilateral denunciation by Egypt of Anglo-Egyptian treaties, permitting British troops to guard the Suez Canal area, and providing for the joint control of the Sudan by Britain and Egypt, were episodes fraught with serious danger to world peace.

► EARLY PEACE IN KOREA hinged on the outcome of the daily sessions of the dilatory truce conference at Panmunjom. The United Nations and Communist delegations are apparently still far apart in their views as to rules to govern the enforcement of the proposed armistice, and as to details for exchange of prisoners.

The United Nations delegation agreed to recede from its previous insistence on air observation behind the lines during an armistice, and to permit limited rehabilitation of airfields for civilian use. The Allies also consented to consider the Red proposal for exchange of all prisoners, without regard to number, provided the enemy gave a satisfactory accounting for many thousands of Allied prisoners not on the official list supplied by the Reds. The Communists want no curtailment of military airfield construction in North Korea, and they are chary about reporting on the fate of more than 50,000 prisoners of war taken by the Reds, in addition to the 11,000 officially listed by them. The Allies charge that many thousands of South Koreans were forcibly impressed into the Red armies.

A new and somewhat complex proposal for exchange of prisoners of war was made by the Allies this week. Under this proposal exchange of prisoners of war would be made on a one-for-one basis until all 11,000 Allied prisoners acknowledged to be held by the Reds were repatriated. This would still leave more than 120,000 Communist prisoners in Allied hands. These would then be exchanged on a man-for-man basis for South Koreans unwillingly incorporated in the Red forces and for such other military or civilian prisoners as may be held by the enemy. The exchange would continue to include interned civilians and displaced persons of either side. Finally all remaining prisoners and civilians desiring repatriation would be exchanged without regard to numbers. The Reds rejected this proposal.

The New Year began with the prompt closing of the Hungarian consulates at New York and Cleveland. This curtailment of official representation of the Communist Budapest government in this country was one consequence of the arrest and imprisonment of four American airmen, who had gotten into Hungarian territory through a navigation error. The flyers were held incommunicado for 40 days, and then given a sudden military trial and fined $120,000, with the alternative of three months' imprisonment. The fine, which was denounced as blackmail, was paid by the United States.

► IN ADDITION TO CLOSING the Hungarian consulates in two American cities as a measure of retaliation, the State Department announced that it will no longer authorize the travel of American citizens to Hungary. Further steps in retribution for the bare-faced extortion of ransom money by Hungary are under consideration. One of these may be a request for the condemnation by the United Nations of the outrageous banditry of Red Hungary. While complete severance of diplomatic relations is unlikely, it is probable that economic sanctions may be imposed against Hungary by this country.

SERVICE NEWS AND GOSSIP

Gen. Thomas Slated For Asst. USMC Comdt.—Maj. Gen. Gerald C. Thomas has been ordered back to the United States from his Korean command and is expected to be named Assistant Commandant of the Marine Corps, with the rank of lieutenant general. Orders transferring the 57-year-old First Marine Division Commander to Marine Corps Headquarters in Washington have been promulgated, and he will be succeeded by Maj. Gen. John T. Seldon, as previously reported in THE JOURNAL.

Lt. Gen. Merwin H. Silverthorn, 55, who has served as second in command to former Marine Commandant General Clifton B. Cates, and is currently serving in the same position under the new Commandant, General Lemuel C. Shepherd, is expected to revert to the rank of major general and be assigned to new duty.

General Shepherd, who assumed office this week, has not yet announced the officers who will make up the remainder of his staff, although Col. Russell E. Honsowetz, former Aide to General Cates, has received orders transferring him to an overseas assignment.

General Thomas, a veteran of more than 34 years of Marine Corps service, has commanded the First Division since last May, and was decorated this week by the Army with the Distinguished Service Medal for his outstanding leadership against the Communist all-out spring offensive.

During his eight-months' assignment as commander of the First Division, General Thomas worked in close alliance with the new Commandant, General Shepherd, who was at that time Commanding General, Fleet Marine Forces, Pacific. General Shepherd made numerous trips from his Pearl Harbor headquarters to the front lines, and was able to observe General Thomas' command at close quarters.

► UNDOUBTEDLY, THERE WILL BE further shifts in the Marine high command. In his initial Washington press conference, shortly after the announcement of his selection, General Shepherd declared that some new general officer assignments would be announced this month. No two-star billet is open at present for General Silverthorn and it is probable such a vacancy will have to be created. This could be done only by shifting other officers into new assignments.

Maj. Gen. W. W. Wensinger, who served as legal aide to General Cates, has already been assigned to new duty as Director of the Division of Plans and Policies, and is succeeded by Brig. Gen. Homer L. Litzenberg, jr., who previously commanded a regiment in Korea. Presumably, General Litzenberg was General Shepherd's choice for the job.

Another officer who may be brought to Washington is Maj. Gen. William O. Brice, who was Deputy Commander to General Shepherd in the Pacific. General Brice, who is an aviator, previously served as Deputy Director of Marine Aviation, and may be named to succeed Brig. Gen. Clayton C. Jerome as Director of Aviation and Assistant Commandant for Air. General Jerome has served in the two-star job since Aug. 1950, but in the rank of Brigadier General.

The only possible assignment now open for General Silverthorn is that of Commanding General, Marine Corps Emergency Forces, Western Sea Frontier, a dual assignment held by Maj. Gen. Alfred H. Noble, Commanding General of the Department of the Pacific. Some observers say, however, that General Silverthorn might succeed Maj. Gen. Henry D. Linscott as Director of the Marine Corps Landing Development Center at Quantico.

USNR Officer in Key AF Med School Post—The new head of the Department of Physiology and Biophysics at the Air Force School of Aviation, Randolph AFB, Tex., is a Naval Reserve officer. He is Dr. Robert T. Clark, jr., a lieutenant commander on inactive duty. He's world renowned for studies in high altitude physiology.

A wartime adviser to President Roosevelt on epidemic diseases, Dr. Francis G. Blake, former Dean of the Yale Medical School, has been named civilian Technical Director of Medical Research in the Office of the Army Surgeon General. He will aid Col. John R. Wood, MC, chairman of the Army Medical Research and Development Board, in supervising more than $10 million worth of medical research.

Long Talk Ends Shorts—After a year's discussion, Canadian officials have decided there will be no more naked knees in their army. Short trousers, formerly worn in the summer, will be discarded.

In another uniform development of note, the U. S. Air Force's "Superpicture Girl," Norma G. Vanderheide of the WAF entered the Officer Candidate School at Lackland AFB, Tex. Said to be the most pictured woman in uniform, she modeled the WAF blue uniform for military manuals, magazines and the Airman's Handbook.

Marine Soloist A Kreisler Honoree—A staff sergeant who once received a violin from Fritz Kreisler as a prize in an instrumental competition will make his first appearance as a violin soloist with the U. S. Marine Corps Band on 10 Jan. at the Department of Commerce Auditorium in Washington, D. C. He is Edward Seferian, 21 years old. He joined the Marines last summer.

Chaplain Murphy Succeeds Chaplain Murphy—Chaplain (Maj.) Charles J. Murphy has assumed duties with the Planning and Training Division, Office Chief of Army Chaplains. He replaces Chaplain (Col.) James B. Murphy, assigned to the European Command.

U. S. Naval Academy—Midshipman Third Class Eugene Thomas Johnston has been elected Editor in Chief of the Lucky Bag, the Academy's annual class book, for the Class of 1954. Capt. Robert B. Pirie, Commandant of Midshipmen, also announced that Midshipman Third Class Garford B. Ballard will serve as Business Manager for the yearbook.

Lt. Comdr. David C. Holly was recently awarded the Bronze Star Medal for his outstanding work in re-establishing the Korean Naval Academy at Chinhae, South Korea. The presentation was made by Vice Adm. Harry W. Hill, Superintendent.

Comdr. William A. Robie, MC, USN, is serving as Executive Officer of the Medical Department. He relieved Capt. James Robert Reid, jr., MC, USN, who has been transferred to duty at the U. S. Naval Hospital, Philadelphia.

A contract for $18,659 has been awarded by the Academy to the Poole and Kent Co., of Baltimore, for the installation of a new hot water heating system in the Academy's Gun Shed on Bronson Road.

Comdr. William J. North, SC, USN, has been assigned to duty as Assistant Supply Officer for the Academy and the Severn River Naval Command. He will reside with his family at Quarters M-3, Perry Circle, Annapolis.

Noted Military Officers Accompany Churchill—Three of Britain's top-ranking military officers will arrive in Washington this week-end with Prime Minister Winston Churchill. They are: Field Marshal Sir William Slim, Admiral of the Fleet Sir Rhoderick McGrigor, and Lt. Gen. Sir Kenneth McLean.

Field Marshal Slim is Chief of Britain's Imperial General Staff—the top-ranking position in the British military service. During World War II, he commanded the British 14th Army in Burma, and from 1945 to 1946 he was Commander in Chief of Allied Land Forces in Southeast Asia. He rose through the ranks from private to field marshal.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir Rhoderick McGrigor occupies a position equivalent to that of the United States Chief of Naval Operations. He was Chief of Staff to the Commander in Chief, China Station, during the early part of World War II, and commanded the HMS Renown in the Mediterranean and Atlantic. He was Naval Forces Commander in the invasion of Sicily, and later commanded the First Cruiser Squadron and Home Fleet Aircraft Carriers in operations off the Norwegian coast and convoys to Northern Russia.

General McLean is Chief Staff Officer to Great Britain's Defence Ministry. In 1949, he was Deputy Military Governor of the British Zone in Germany, and he holds the United States Legion of Merit which he won in the European Theater in 1945. Prior to his present assignment, he was Military Secretary to Britain's Secretary of State for War.

Admiral Elected Mayor—Admiral E. D. Stanley, USN-Ret., has been elected chairman or Mayor of the township committee of Cranford, N. J.

AF Girl Chasers—The 54th Strategic Reconnaissance Squadron of the Air Weather Service, based on Guam, has won a reputation as a girl-chasing outfit. During 1951, on 116 missions, the 54th pursued 15 destructive damsels, whose names include Georgia, Hope, Joan, Kate and Wanda—all names of tropical typhoons.

Army Airplane Navy Blue—Army Aircraft Number 099, more celebrated as the "Blue Goose," has recorded more than 40,000 miles of combat flight in Korea. Its name results from a paint job accomplished aboard the carrier USS Baedong Straits. Unable to find any of the Army's regulation olive drab paint aboard the ship, Sgt. Eldon E. Brasel used Navy issue blue.

New Post For Horse Expert—Col. Ralph E. Ireland, Army horse expert, will be reassigned on 26 Jan. from the Reno Remount Station in Oklahoma to duty as Commanding Officer of the San Antonio, Tex., General Depot. His successor is Col. Theodore C. Wenzlaff, Hdqs., VI Corps, Camp Atterbury, Ind.

Propose Military Medical Scholarships—The Armed Forces Medical Policy Council has given its O.K. to a plan for providing scholarships in approved medical schools as part of a long-range program of procurement for medical officers. Students accepting the scholarships would be obligated for military service. In past years, there has been considerable discussion about possible establishment of a medical school for the Armed Forces, but no request was made to Congress for such authorization.

The Medical Policy Council has under study also a proposal to award point credits to Reserve officers who attend annual meetings of the Association of Military Surgeons. The Army, Navy and Air Force will determine whether this plan can be applied to their respective medical reserve systems.

After 35 Years, Col. Daughtry Retires—Following 35 years' service, Col. George O. A. Daughtry has retired from the Army. He had been Executive Officer, Georgia Military District. He makes his home at 700 Belvedere Circle, N.E., Atlanta.

Army Goes Under Ground—Army Ordnance has leased a huge cave near Atchison, Kans., for the storage of specialized defense production machines. The 14-acre underground storehouse will provide space at 7½ cents per square foot per year in comparison with a 50-cent cost at commercially owned warehouses.

GENERAL Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Chief of Staff of the Air Force, and Mrs. Vandenberg were the honor guests at dinner given last evening by General Nathan F. Twining, USAF, and Mrs. Twining, at their quarters at Ft. Myer.

General and Mrs. Twining had a house party over the Holidays including Lt. Richard Twining who came up from Reese AFB, Tex., and Mr. Nathan Alexander Twining, who has been a student at Stuyvesant School in Virginia, but will remain at home from now on and attend Western High School. Miss Olive Twining attends Woodrow Wilson High School in Washington.

Col. Oscar R. Rand, USA-Ret., and Mrs. Rand, who reside at Woodley Park Towers in Washington, D. C., recently attended the 249th Convocation of the University of Chicago. At this convocation, which was held in Rockefeller Memorial Chapel on 21 Dec., Mrs. Rand received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Her work for the degree was in the Department of Romance Languages and Literatures, and the research for her dissertation was done in the field of modern Spanish literature. Mrs. Rand is a member of the faculty of the University of Maryland.

Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Richard C. Lindsay returned to Washington Christmas Eve from Europe where General Lindsay attended the N.A.T.O. conference in Naples, and Mrs. Lindsay visited friends in France, England, Italy and Germany. She was the guest of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Truman Landon in Germany and also of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Millard Lewis. In London she was with Maj. Gen. and Mrs. C. V. R. Schuyler, recently stationed at Fort Myer, now in England on post.

In Italy, Mrs. Lindsay was the guest of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. David Schlatter in Florence and Col. and Mrs. Edward Suarez.

U. S. COAST GUARD

IN a switch of policy, the Coast Guard now is holding in abeyance, "until further notice," action on applications for voluntary retirement from Regular officers.

Shortly after Congress enacted in the 1952 military appropriations bill a proviso restricting retirement of Regular Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps officers, THE JOURNAL asked the Coast Guard what it intended to do in this matter in view of the fact that the Coast Guard is not included in this appropriations legislation. Coast Guard funds are part of the Treasury budget.

The answer was that the Coast Guard would not be affected and that no new retirement restrictions would be imposed.

Now comes the word that the Secretary of the Treasury is holding up applications for retirement. It was stated that if any applicant believes he should be voluntarily retired in order to avoid individual hardship, "it is required that he submit through channels to the Secretary of the Treasury a statement setting forth the facts which he believes causes hardships in his case unless retirement is effected."

Permanent warrant and enlisted personnel are not included in the retirement limitation order.

The appropriations bill for the Department of Defense permits retirements of Regular officers only for physical disability in line of duty and achievement of statutory age. Retirement also may be effected if the Secretary of Defense stipulates it is in the best interests of the Service or that retirement is required to avoid cases of individual hardship.

Coast Guard officials gave no explanation for the adoption of the new policy. However, in the past the Coast Guard consistently has duplicated Navy personnel actions wherever practicable and con-

Jenkins, assistant vice commander, 314th Air Division; and Lt. Col. Christopher B. Cushing, 40th AAA Brigade Liaison Officer.

General Spivey paid tribute to his command in the following words: "I have been working with the finest group of people I have ever known in my life. Every base commander and every area commander has supported me in a superior manner."

General Spivey then read messages from four general officers who were unable to be present, all of them expressing appreciation for the work of the 314th. They were: Lt. Gen. O. P. Weyland, Commanding General, Far East Air Forces; Maj. Gen. Frank F. Everest, Commanding, Fifth Air Force; Maj. Gen. J. C. Styron, Commanding, 45th Infantry Division, and Brig. Gen. Joe W. Kelly, FEAF Bomber Command commander.

ceivably has taken the new action in keeping with this policy.

Also, the action may have been taken to prevent any future Congressional criticism, although Congress clearly has not taken any steps to restrict the retirement of Coast Guard personnel, as was done for the other Services.

European Army

and what Spain in turn will do to justify it—and will not touch the political differences which for so many years have shunted Spain outside the gatherings of western nations. A permanent MSA agency in Madrid will be named, probably in the coming week, to arrange deliveries in the same manner as under arrangements with other countries. The importance of modern airfields in Spain, particularly for coordination with naval movements in the Eastern Atlantic and the Mediterranean, can hardly be over-emphasized, and it was this need which led to the initial negotiations by the late Admiral Forrest P. Sherman at a time when international differences with Senor

Franco were high. As to Spain's political behavior, the reading public was startled at announcement in Madrid itself of a burning criticism of current official abuses. That such a complaint should have reached publication suggests that the tightness of the totalitarian government's censorship is relaxing somewhat. The 3,000-word protest against governmental extravagance was made by Lt. Col. Luis Serrano de Pablo, a member of the national council of the Falange party and (at last report, anyway) commander of Spain's air base in the Canaries. The budget against which he was protesting was passed regardless of the colonel's complaints of ostentation, abuse of privilege, and taxation of necessities. He complained also of an over-large army which, despite underpayment that drives many officers to seek outside work for income's sake, obviously costs a great deal; he urged rather "a small professional army composed of teams of real experts and led by trained officers," and warned that his own service, the Air Force, is "in an appalling state of unpreparedness." Of all this we will be learning more through official reports as 1952 progresses.

Tax Refunds Are Due Thousands of Wounded

Maj. Gen. Bickford E. Sawyer, Army Chief of Finance, reported this week that thousands of military personnel are due for income tax refunds.

The correction of an inequity in the legislation providing a special income tax exemption for Service personnel in Korea is the reason for the refunds.

When the initial legislation was passed in 1950, THE JOURNAL pointed out immediately that a person who was wounded and evacuated from the combat zone would lose his special exemption, while another person might be serving in a non-danger area in the combat zone and continue to receive the exemption. This obvious inequity was resolved by Congress last October.

Here is the explanation of the situation, as described by General Sawyer:

The 1950 tax law provided that enlisted men and warrant officers would owe no income tax for that year on Army pay earned while they were in the combat zone, and that $200 of a combat zone officer's pay each month also would be exempt from income taxes.

Last October, Congress amended the 1950 law.

The amendment extended the original law through 1953. In addition, it provided the same income tax exemptions for servicemen hospitalized as a result of Korean service—even if they were sent back to hospitals in the States. As long as they remained under hospital care for their combat zone wound, injury or disease, they were entitled to the same exemption. This provision was made retroactive back to 24 June, 1950.

On 1 Nov., 1951, Finance officers began taking the new amendment into account when they disbursed the monthly pay.

But—the retroactive provision means that many hospitalized and formerly hospitalized soldiers already had had too much tax money withheld from earlier paychecks—in some cases, as far back as

INDUSTRY * FINANCE * MARITIME

16 months. These excess tax withholdings are what they are due to have refunded.

How do you get the refund? A hypothetical case was presented.

Sgt. John Doe was wounded in Korea on 1 March, 1951, and was evacuated immediately to the States. Under the original law, his income tax exemption ceased the month he left the combat zone.

Sergeant Doe recuperated in an Army hospital and went back to duty 1 Oct.

Under the amended law, he is entitled to full exemption from income taxes on his Army pay for the seven months he spent in the hospital.

Sometime this month, Sergeant Doe will receive from the Army his W-2 Form, which shows the amount of Army pay on which he paid income taxes in 1951. Because of the retroactive amendment, he will have had too much withheld.

Sergeant Doe's next step is to obtain, from his unit personnel officer, a certificate stating the months during any part of which he was hospitalized as a result of his wounds. The certificate also will state the amount of pay earned by Sergeant Doe during this period of hospitalization, if such information is available to the personnel officer.

Sergeant Doe, like almost everyone else, has to submit an income tax return before 15 March, 1952. In figuring what he owes, he will NOT use the total amount paid him, as shown on his W-2 Form. Instead, he will subtract from that total the amount of pay he earned while hospitalized. This lesser amount is his "taxable income," and he can use that total to figure out his income taxes for 1951.

When he mails his 1951 income tax return to the Collector of Internal Revenue, he will include the W-2 and also a copy of the personnel officer's certificate.

His computations on the income tax return will show the amount of taxes he overpaid in 1951.

Then all he has to do is sit back and wait for the refund from the internal revenue bureau.

General Sawyer pointed out that, because of the retroactive provision of the law, some soldiers—and ex-soldiers—are entitled to refunds on their income taxes for 1950 as well. He advised such persons to consult their local internal revenue collectors as to the procedure necessary to secure a refund.

Ship Builders Report

Going into 1951, the Shipbuilders Council of America reported 97 merchant vessels of 1,000 gross tons or over aggregating 1.2 million gross tons under contract for construction.

A year-end report showed one passenger vessel, three Military Sea Transport Service ships, 35 cargo vessels, 38 tankers, 17 bulk ore carriers and three large ferry boats under contract.

With regard to Navy and Armed Services contracts, the Council said: "The Navy's program of reactivation, modernization and new construction, inaugurated in the middle of the year, and covering the construction of one large aircraft carrier, an anti-submarine destroyer escort ship, one nuclear powered submarine, several landing ships tank, a large number of mine sweepers, a number of barges, harbor tugs, control boats and other service boats, together with some reconversions, has resulted in awards to many yards scattered far and wide over the United States. Most of the smaller work, consisting of minesweepers, harbor tugs, control boats, barges and the like has been distributed among the smaller yards.

"All the larger shipyards will be kept reasonably busy during 1952 with 70% of merchant ship construction on hand scheduled for completion within the year and the majority of the balance of 30% due for delivery within the first six months of 1953," the Council reported.

Minesweeper Contracts

Award of contracts for the construction of 32 AMS-60 class minesweepers was announced this week by Rear Adm. Homer N. Wallin, Chief of the Navy Bureau of Ships.

Total value of contract awards, including centrally procured material, is approximately $28,000,000. Estimated cost of centrally procured material is $165,000 per vessel. Sparkman and Stevens, Inc., of New York City, is the central procurement agent and will prepare detailed working plans.

Contract awards were made to the following firms: Bellingham Shipyards, Inc., Bellingham, Wash., six minesweepers; Stephens Brothers, Inc., Stockton, Calif., four minesweepers; South Coast Co., Newport Beach, Calif., six minesweepers; George W. Kneass Co., San Francisco, three minesweepers; G. Hildebrand Drydock Co., Kingston, N. Y., six minesweepers; Stowman Shipyards, Inc., Dorchester, N. J., three minesweepers; Hogdon Brothers, Goudy and Stevens East Boothbay, Maine, four minesweepers.

Cut Navy Clothing Prices

Prices of clothing and footwear for Navy enlisted men were reduced about 20 per cent this week, with a drop of four dollars in the price of dress blue jumpers, a two-dollar-cut in shoe prices, and a $2.80 decrease in the price of blue trousers.

The reduction is the first readjustment in the price of Navy clothing, sold through official "small stores," since prices were raised last March. The Navy said the cut was made possible by reduced prices of materials which have been recently purchased and "an indicated future downward market trend in textiles and footwear."

Representative price reductions which became effective this week included blue dress jumpers, down to $12.50 from $16.50; blue undress jumpers, down to $7.10 from $11.65; overcoats down to $32 from $39.65; low-cut black shoes, down to $6.50 from $8.50; blue trousers, down to $12.20 from $15 and cotton undershirts, down to 45 cents from 60 cents.

Initial Enlisted Allowance

At the same time, the initial clothing monetary allowance for enlisted men was set at $223.90. It will be paid in two increments of $3 and $220.90 in the same manner as is now prescribed for enlisted women. The Navy said the first increment is to cover the cost of alterations to the initial outfit.

The value of the first increment of the initial clothing monetary allowance for enlisted women was increased to $40 and the second increment decreased to $270.15.

Both men and women who become entitled to the initial clothing allowance this year will receive a basic maintenance allowance which will accrue beginning with the day following the date they complete six months active duty in a pay status after the date of their last entitlement to an initial allowance.

Naval cadets will receive "issue in kind" which is not to exceed $252.75.

Enlisted men of the Navy, Naval Reserve, Fleet Reserve, and retired enlisted men of the Navy and Naval Reserve (except members of the Navy and Naval Academy bands) will be entitled to a special initial clothing allowance of $300 when advanced in rating to chief petty officer. The same personnel when assigned to the Navy band or Naval Academy band (except those holding CPO ratings) also will receive an initial allowance of $300.

5-Year Ordnance Works Lease

The Mathieson Chemical Corporation of Baltimore, Md., and Army Chief of Engineers Lt. Gen. Lewis A. Pick have executed a five-year lease under which that corporation will operate the Morgantown, W. Va., Ordnance Works.

The corporation expects to start production of ammonia and methanol at the facility by February or early March.

NAVY AIR TRAINING

The Naval Air Technical Training Command can accommodate approximately 15,000 students in its schools.

War In Korea

The Australian Fireflies and Sea Furies destroyed or damaged many buildings, and dropped spans on two rail bridges.

Heavy Air Attacks

Communist main rail supply lines north and south of Pyongyang in North Korea were repeatedly ripped by Air Force fighter-bombers during the week, as clearing weather enabled resumption of maximum air operations nearly every day. Hundreds of cuts were made in rail lines in the continued effort to bottle up movements of enemy supplies to front lines.

American F-84 Thunder Jets made scores of rail cuts, and knocked out a rail bridge, while at the same time inflicting numerous casualties on the enemy. F-51 Mustangs, F-80 Shooting Stars, and Marine Fighter-bombers worked over the rail lines from Kunu-ri to Sunchon, from Pyongyang to Sariwon, and from Sunchon to Pyongyang. In these attacks rail cars were destroyed, buildings demolished, and gun positions knocked out. In addition heavy casualties were inflicted and bunkers were blasted.

Medium B-29 bombers, based on Okinawa, dropped 50 tons of high explosive 500-lb. bombs on the Sandong-ni marshalling yards, using radar aiming technique. Other Superforts struck the Sinanju airfield with radar-aimed 100-lb. missiles. Still other B-29s dropped 500-lb. air-bursting bombs on Red troop concentrations near the front lines.

Attacks were made on enemy truck convoys by night-flying B-26 light bombers and Marine planes. Scores of supply trucks were destroyed.

In a New Year's Day encounter two enemy jet planes were damaged by American Sabre Jets. In mid-afternoon 29 F-86 Sabre Jets sighted approximately 60 enemy MIG-15 jet fighters in the Sinanju area, and immediately engaged them. In a 30-minute battle at altitudes of from 36,000 to 23,000 feet two enemy planes were damaged, and none of our planes was hit. In other brief encounters another enemy MIG was damaged and there was no damage to Allied planes. Formations of enemy planes were sighted frequently during the week, but most of the time they avoided battle by flying back to Manchuria. Five American planes were lost to enemy ground fire during the week.

Gen. Weyland's Statement

In a year-end statement issued by Lt. Gen. Otto P. Weyland, USAF, commanding the Far East Air Force, the success of Operation Strangle, the designation of the Allied air interdiction program in North Korea, was reviewed. The operation was started nearly five months ago. Its purpose was to destroy railroads, forcing the Reds to place greater dependence on highway traffic, and to attack this traffic relentlessly, thus greatly reducing the amount of enemy supplies reaching the front, and preventing a logistical buildup for a sustained Red offensive.

General Weyland estimates that during the past four and a half months the rail destruction has been so heavy that the enemy was forced to maintain a fleet of at least 6,000 2-ton trucks, which required a minimum of five days to make the round trip from Antung, the main supply base in Manchuria, to the front line. Attrition and night air attacks, compounded by increased accidents and wear and tear inherent in night movements, probably cost the enemy at least 7,500 trucks a month. If this estimate is accurate it would mean that the enemy has lost nearly 40,000 trucks since Operation Strangle was launched.

The continuous and systematic Allied air attacks on enemy transport has inflicted such heavy damage on rail lines that it is believed that more than 100,000 laborers are continually engaged in a gigantic repair job. Many lines have been hit so often that they are structurally weakened to such an extent that it is necessary for trains to operate at greatly reduced speeds. Some lines have been abandoned and cannibalized, their rails being used to repair other lines. Numerous rail cuts have necessitated the movement of trains over short stretches of track, and the use of trucks to bridge the gaps.

Forced Use of Trucks

One tactical advantage derived by the Allies from the constant attacks on enemy rail systems has been to push back railheads an average distance of more than 75 miles, requiring the greater use of trucks on congested forward highways. Another result has been to compel the enemy to divert much of the Red combat effort to defensive measures, with a great increase in anti-aircraft batteries in rear areas.

In an attempt to counter heavy Allied air attacks on transportation facilities the Reds have made a spectacular augmentation of their jet fighter aircraft. These enemy interceptors have made daylight operations of B-29 medium bombers more costly, with the result that this activity has been largely shifted to radar bombing at night, with little loss of efficiency.

General Weyland said that Operation Strangle has proved so successful that it will be continued indefinitely, or until the tactical situation, or cease-fire arrangements dictate another course. Originally this operation was intended to be limited to a 90-day period.

The Department of Defense has announced that total enemy casualties through 17 Dec. are estimated to aggregate 1,546,868, including 37,536 Korean civilian internees, most of whom are believed to be individuals unwillingly forced to aid the enemy, and whose ultimate release from internment is expected. The estimated total casualties represent an increase of 19,970 over the last previous estimate as of 5 Dec. Of the total losses 690,551, not including the 37,536 civilian internees, were sustained by the North Koreans, and 818,781 by the Chinese Reds.

It is estimated that the North Koreans lost 454,382 in battle casualties, 124,399 in non-battle casualties, and 111,770 in military prisoners of war. Losses of the Chinese Reds were estimated at 656,234 killed and wounded, 141,874 sick and injured, and 20,673 prisoners of war.

Missing Persons

But the legislation is only temporary. It needs to be made permanent, particularly in view of the increased number of military personnel who participate in aircraft flights. It is pointed out that there are numerous cases, in peacetime as well as in a war situation, where a plane crashes and cannot be found. Its passengers conceivably may be alive and therefore should not be declared dead. With the Missing Persons Act on the books, the Services can take appropriate action. Without the legislation, serious problems in human relations would result.

It is conceded, of course, that the Service Secretaries are given broad authority by the Act, for it is stipulated that the decisions are not subject to later review. If this were not so, a finance officer certainly could not act speedily enough in many cases to prevent hardships. Also it is conceivable that if decisions were open to later review that officials might hesitate to authorize allotments beyond what was stipulated by the military sponsor, even though the needs of his family had changed, possibly, as cited through increased living costs, illness or other emergency. Officials grant that some errors may occur, but these would be insignificant in comparison to the hardship cases, which are eliminated.

It is anticipated that Congress will endorse this broad authority for the Secretaries to insure that everything possible is done to reduce the suffering of families of military personnel who are missing.

When you move, notify the Army Navy Air Force Journal of your change of address so you will not miss any issues.

Adm. Claytor Retires

Rear Adm. Spry O. Claytor, (DC) Assistant Chief of the Navy's Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, was retired this week after more than 34 years' service in the Navy.

He had served as Assistant Chief of the Bureau, in charge of Dentistry, since June 1950, and was also Chief of the Dental Division.

Born on 16 Dec. 1889, in Prince Frederick, Md., Admiral Claytor was graduated from The George Washington University in Washington, D. C., and did graduate work at the University of California. He entered the Navy in December 1917, and was appointed to his present rank in July 1942.

Rear Adm. Lamont Pugh, Surgeon General of the Navy commended Admiral Claytor in a ceremony on 29 Dec., for "outstanding professional and administrative ability in handling the many dental problems with which you have had to deal."

The retiring Admiral is a member of the American College of Dentists and the International College of Dentists.

Navy to Convert Cruisers For Guided Missile Use

The Defense Department confirmed reports this week that the Navy will convert two heavy cruisers for use as guided missile warships.

Both vessels, the Canberra and the Boston, are now at Bremerton, Wash., but will depart sometime this month for undisclosed shipyards where the conversion work will be started. The announcement said "The shipyards which will make the conversions have not been determined." Authorization for the conversions was contained in the 1952 fiscal shipbuilding conversion program.

A similar program was abandoned by the Navy in 1947 after initial work had been completed on the conversion of two vessels, the battleship Kentucky and the cruiser Hawaii. At that time the Navy announced that guided missile research was not far enough advanced to justify continued work on the ships. Both ships were ordered in 1940, but neither was ever launched.

The Defense Department said the types of guided missiles which will be utilized on the ships "is not releasable at this time due to the fact that details are incomplete." It also said it could not state how long the conversions will take.

There are four general classes of guided missiles in various stages of development. One of these is the "surface to surface" missile which is equivalent to super long-range artillery. It may be fired from shipboard against an enemy ship, or from land. The Defense Department said "Its range may be anything between a few score miles and a few thousand." In March 1950 its development had already been "well advanced for those of a few hundred miles' range."

Armor Assn. to Meet

General J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, will address the 63d Annual Meeting of the United States Armor Association at Ft. Knox, Ky., on 14 Jan., unless unforeseen developments intervene.

Tankers from around the country, including key personnel of the arm, will assemble at the Home of Armor to participate in what will be the largest professional gathering in the history of the 66-year-old organization of mobile warfare.

Lt. Gen. Willis D. Crittenger, USA, Commanding General of First Army and President of the Armor Association, will preside. Maj. Gen. I. D. White, USA, Commanding General of The Armored Center and The Armored School, will be host.

New Mortar Firing Table

Pfc John Giunco of the 1st Cavalry Division recently devised a new mortar firing table which observers say may revolutionize heavy weapons firing.

Giunco is a computer with the 8th Regiment's Heavy Weapons Company fire direction center.

His new system simplifies the calculating of range and deflection and reduces error. It also enables a mortar position to double its firing area. The Army announcement from Korea states that Giunco began work on the new table after reading an article on fire direction in the ARMY NAVY AIR FORCE JOURNAL.

His commanding officer, 1st Lt. Starkey R. Cox, jr. of Morgantown, W. Va., said that Giunco's method is already being adopted by some artillery units in Korea.

Giunco is a 1950 graduate of Rutgers University. He received heavy weapons training at Ft. Dix, N. J., before going to the Far East.

and dangers which our soldiers have braved and are braving in Korea. For the front-line ground soldier, mere existence is a problem in the narrow valleys and rugged mountains of Korea where the crudest sort of protection from the elements is a luxury. Beset by summer mud and heat, by winter ice and sub-zero cold, our Infantrymen have at the same time fought a savage and ruthless enemy who follows a code of warfare inherited from the barbaric past.

"And after those who support him have come and gone, the doughboy stands alone to share the isolation of the battlefield with the enemy and the dead.

"No, pay alone is not adequate remuneration for men who risk their lives daily under conditions that exist in Korea. If we had to depend on pay alone to obtain ground soldiers for service there, we would be woefully understrength indeed.

"However, the additional combat pay would serve to correct the obvious inequity that gives additional combat pay to a man participating in hazardous training and to a man who is fighting for his very life. One of the great principles in our democratic nation is that of equity, and it could never be said that equity was achieved by failing to give equal monetary recognition to the man who risks his life every day on the ground. It would raise the morale, and therefore the fighting effectiveness of our troops in Korea. And lastly, it would be a tangible gesture that we Americans at home have not forgotten them and have real appreciation for the dirty and important job they are doing."

WE COULDN'T PUT MEN IN MOTHBALLS!

But when the present emergency suddenly caused the need for electronics specialists, they were available just as surely as if they had been stored away with mothballed equipment. PHILCO's TechRep Division was ready to supply the needed manpower.

The highly trained electronics experts in this organization are excellently suited for the job at hand. Military electronic devices are becoming more complex than those in use at the end of World War II... but the PHILCO TechRep Field Engineer has kept pace with these developments. He is able immediately to go into the field to supervise and train others in the installation, operation and maintenance of the most complicated electronic systems. He is capable and resourceful. His years of experience are backed by intensive training in theory and its practical application.

Today, as in World War II, the TechRep Field Engineer is with military units wherever he is needed. He is proud of his organization... proud of the military team with which he works... and proud of his contribution to the security of the country he serves so well.
